In 1806 Bishop composed a "Grand Heroic Ballet, Tamerlan et Bajazet," which was produced at the King's Theatre in April or May, but he states, with characteristic candour, "The chief part of the music, however, I selected from a Ballet of Martini's, by desire of the Ballet-master, Ropi. Kramer also had two marches in it for the military band. The original score of the music I composed for it became Ropi's, by agreement; and it was published, with Kramer's Marches and some of the music of Martini, by Pearce and Co., in the Haymarket. This Ballet had a very great success." In this adaptation he only followed the example of his great predecessor, Handel; but, unlike him, he gave the credit where it was justly due.

In the same year he composed the Overture for a ballet entitled "Armide et Renaud" (which he arranged as a pianoforte duet, published by Birchall in Bond Street, whilst Goulding and Co. printed the orchestral parts), and a "Grand Anacreontic Ballet, called 'Narcisse et Les Graces.'" The ballet-master was Ropi, and the principal dancers were Deshayes and his wife, and Parisot. Both these were produced at the King's Theatre, but I find no mention of the two operatic pieces stated in Grove's Dictionary as having been produced at Drury Lane during this year.

In 1807 and 1808 his talent was very prolific, for he gives a long list of vocal and instrumental compositions, of which the most important are songs for Incledon's "Entertainment," for Mrs. Mountain and Braham; twelve glees dedicated to Bianchi, which include the well-known "Foresters, sound the cheerful horn," "When wearied wretches," and "Where art thou, beam of light"; melodramatic pieces for "The Siege of St. Quentin" at Drury Lane; a Concertante for violin, flute, oboe, bassoon, and double bass, with full orchestral accompaniment, performed at the City Concerts, but never printed; a Trio for three flutes; a Sonata for violin and pianoforte; part of an Oratorio, "The Deluge," and also in 1808 "Caractacus" and "Love in a Tub," which are wrongly given for 1806 in Grove. "Caractacus" was the first piece I composed for the English stage* in London. It was termed a 'Grand Serious Ballet of

* The King's Theatre being principally devoted to the French and Italian Schools.

Action' with choruses, and was produced at Drury Lane Theatre in March, 1808. It was written by Thos. Sheridan, and produced by J. H. D'Egville, and was played twenty-four nights in the first season. It was very successful, and in it was a Pas Seul danced by Miss Gayton, to the melody of which Moore wrote the song, 'My Heart and Lute.'" "Love in a Tub, a Pastoral Ballet," was produced in November, and between that and April, 1810, was played for 300 nights, a proof of almost unprecedented popularity in those days of short runs. He also in 1808 wrote songs and chorus for "The Mysterious Bride," a romantic drama by Mr. Skeffington, "now Sir Lumley Skeffington."

In 1809 his first grand opera, "The Circassian Bride," was produced at Drury Lane in February, and on the following night the theatre was burnt to the ground, the score perishing in the flames; but Bishop shortly afterwards re-wrote all he could remember of it, and portions were published. He gives the following interesting details of the performers and libretto:—"The principal singers were Miss Lyon, Mrs. Mountain, Mrs. Bland, Mr. Braham, Mr. J. Smith, Mr. G. Smith, Mr. J. Bannister, and Mr. Matthews. The words were by Mr. Ward, a relation of Richard B. Sheridan, and I have reason to believe that some of the poetry was by Sheridan. The poetry of the song 'Sweet Maid' was by my friend, J. Sheridan Knowles; the words of the song 'Simon Supple' were by James Smith, one of the authors of 'Rejected Addresses.'"

"Mora's Love; or, The Enchanted Harp," was produced at the King's Theatre on June 15 of the same year, and afterwards transferred to the Lyceum, under the title of "The Caledonian Minstrel"; whilst a musical romance, "The Vintagers," was produced at the Haymarket.

About this time he resided at Bedford, and whilst there wrote "The Maniac; or, The Swiss Banditti," a grand opera produced at the Lyceum on March 13, 1810, by the Drury Lane Company, which had migrated there from their burnt-out home.

This was followed, in 1811, by "The Knight of Snowdown," dramatised by Mr. T. Morton, from Scott's "Lady of the Lake," and produced at Covent Garden on February 5, 1811, being published by Messrs. Goulding, with whom he had entered into an engagement.

In 1811 Bishop was appointed Composer and Director of Music at Covent Garden Theatre, and his first work for that appointment was "The Virgin of the Sun; a Grand Operatic Drama," performed on January 31, 1812, with Miss Botton (afterwards Lady Thurlow), Miss Feron, Mrs. Child, Mr. Sinclair, and Mr. Broadhurst as principals.

This year was also marked by the composition and production of "The Æthiop" and "The Renegade" (the words of the latter being an adaptation by F. Reynolds of Dryden's "Don Sebastian"), and amongst the miscellaneous items are additional accompaniments to "Romeo and Juliet," "Comus," and "Midas."

1813 proved to be another very prolific year, but the first item in Grove—"Haroun Alraschid"—for that date is not a new work, but "The Æthiop," with slight alterations and a new caste and title. The works of this year are "The Brazen Bust," a melodrama; "Harry le Roy," a heroic pastoral burletta written entirely in recitatives and airs, partly original and partly selected from French and other airs; "The Miller and his Men," a melodrama; a Canzonet in G minor "for the Album of Mr. J. Windsor, of Bath"; "For England, Ho!" a melodramatic opera; additional music for "Selina and Azar" and "Poor Vulcan"; and a new Finale to "Artaxerxes"; the "Epicidium" in "Anthony and Cleopatra"; and some small pieces for the theatre.

In 1814 he wrote "The Farmer's Wife," a comic opera to Charles Dibdin's words, with the collaboration of Davy, Reeve, and others; "The Wandering Boys; or, The Castle of Olival"; the first act of "Sadok and Kalasrade; or, the Waters of Oblivion," the second act being composed by Mr. Ware; "The Grand Alliance," which was "an occasional piece in honour of the illustrious visitors to the British Court—viz., the Emperor of Russia, King of Prussia, &c.—and was performed in their presence, and that of the Prince Regent, on June 13th"; "Doctor Sangrado"; "The Forest of Bondy"; "John of Paris," the music chiefly adapted from Boieldieu's "Jean de Paris"; and he also "arranged the whole of the recitatives in 'Artaxerxes' with orchestral accompaniment, as it was performed at Covent Garden Theatre, and composed for the oratorio a Scena (!) entitled 'Hanover,' the words by Southey, for Mr. Braham."

In 1815, "Brother and Sister"; "The Noble Outlaw," an opera in three acts; "Telemachus," opera in two acts; "The Magpie and the Maid"; "John du Boit"; additional music to "Comus" and "Cymon"; and miscellaneous items.

In 1816 came "A Midsummer Night's Dream," adapted by F. Reynolds from Shakespeare; "Guy Mannering," founded on Scott's novel; "Who wants a Wife?"; "The Slave," an opera which proved highly successful, but is not given in Grove; a selection of "Scottish Melodies"; and "The Royal Nuptials; or, The Masque of Hymen," performed at Covent Garden on May 6 to celebrate the marriage of the Princess Charlotte of Wales with Prince Leopold of Coburg. This also is not named in Grove.

1817 began with "The Humorous Lieutenant," produced January 18, followed by "The Heir of Vironi," an opera in two acts, Grove says "with Whitaker," but this does not appear to be correct, as Bishop is always most careful to state the name of any other musician who wrote even a single song in any of his works. "The Duke of Savoy" was produced on September 29, and "The Father and his Children," on October 25, and he also adapted the music of "Don Giovanni" to a piece called "The Libertine." All the preceding are given in Grove, but the following, also during the same year, are not there named:—"The Gentle Shepherd," songs for pieces at the Haymarket, a cantata, "Mourn Israel," on the occasion of the death of Princess Charlotte, the words being by Coleridge; songs for Braham; and "Retribution; or, The Chieftain's Daughter."

The first work during 1818 is "The Illustrious Traveller," performed on February 3, followed by "Zuma," an opera in three acts, on February 21, in which Braham composed his own songs, the whole of the words being by Dibdin. On May 16 "December and May" was produced, but was not a success, and, referring to the fact that only one number in it was published, Bishop adds the humorous comment, "'Rude was the gale, and unkind was the billow,' was not altogether an inappropriate song to publish after the storm which the piece encountered the first night of its performance." Also in the same year he wrote many songs for the theatre, and music for the melodrama "The Burgomaster of Jaardam," together with a Funeral Anthem for the late Queen Charlotte, none of the latter being in Grove.

1819 saw "The Marriage of Figaro" produced on March 6. The words by Miss Costello, and the music partly by Bishop and partly adapted from Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" and other sources, the principal singers being Mrs. Dickson, Miss Stephens, Miss Beaumont, Mrs. Sterling, Mr. Duraset, Mr. Pyne, and Mr. Isaacs. Next came "Fortunatus and his Song"; "The Heart of Midlothian"; "A Roland for an Oliver," adapted and arranged for the orchestra from French airs; "Swedish Patriotism"; "The Gnome King," and the "Comedy of Errors"; and, in addition, although not given in Grove, a cantata, "The Jolly Beggars"; additional accompaniments to "Macbeth"; "Arthur and Emmeline"; and a number of songs, being under the terms of a six years' engagement to Mr. Power, Publisher, in the Strand.

In January, 1820, he produced "The Antiquary," "Henri Quatre," "The Battle of Bothwell Brigg," "Twelfth Night," and (not in Grove) "Montoni"; an "Irish Overture," performed at the Rotunda, Dublin, on August 5; and arranged a number of Irish melodies.

In 1821 he composed a "Grand Triumphal Ode" in honour of the first anniversary of the accession of King George IV., which was performed as one of the so-called "Oratorios" at Covent Garden on March 9; "Don John"; and "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," all of which are named in Grove; and, in addition to these, the "Coronation" Music in "Henry IV."; additional accompaniments to Kreitzer's "Lodoiska" Overture; and he arranged Book I. of "Melodies of Various Nations," and Book III. of "National Airs."

On February 14, 1822, he produced "Montrose; or, The Children of the Mist"; followed by "The Law of Java," in which occurs the well-known glee "Mynheer Van Dunck"; "Maid Marian"; "The Tempest" (not in Grove), and another volume of "National Airs," with smaller items.

"Clari; or, The Maid of Milan," in which "Home, sweet home," occurs, was produced in 1823; as were also "The Beacon of Liberty," "Cortez," and (not in Grove) "The Vespers of Palermo," and "Nigel," with miscellaneous songs, including "Evenings in Greece."

In 1824, in addition to the two works, "Native Land" and "Charles the Second," given in Grove, Bishop composed the opera "As you like it," which is of interest as being the last work he wrote during his engagement at Covent Garden Theatre, which had lasted for fourteen years, and he then (not in 1825) accepted a similar post at Drury Lane, where he produced Weber's "Der Freischütz."

His first opera composed for Drury Lane was "The Fall of Algiers," produced January 19, 1825, and in the same year "The Coronation of Charles X." was composed; also, not given in Grove, "Faustus," "William Tell," and "Masaniello," and several volumes of arrangements of National Airs. The two last-named works must not be confounded with the immortal works of Auber and Rossini, as the date shows, but were written by Sheridan Knowles and G. Soane respectively, and composed—not adapted—by Bishop.

In 1826 he produced his "Aladdin," which the management of Drury Lane Theatre intended as a set-off to Weber's "Oberon" at Covent Garden; "but," he adds, "chiefly owing to the imperfect state in which it was brought out, it was not successful." This was followed by "The Knights of the Cross," and he also composed (not given in Grove) a cantata, "Waterloo," for five voices; Vol. I. of "Legends of the Rhine," and other songs. In 1827 (not 1826) he produced his comic opera of "Englishmen in India," on January 27, and "The Rencontre," on July 12. Grove gives no items between 1826 and 1830, but this gap I am able to fill up, and also to correct the statement that Bishop, in 1820, undertook the "Oratorios" "on his own account, which he relinquished, however, before the commencement of another year." He could not have given them up then, as he states that in 1827 he "produced, at the Oratorios, Beethoven's Opera of 'Fidelio,' with English words by Planchè." In this same year he wrote a "Grand March for the Royal Society of Musicians," a second volume of "Legends of the Rhine," and a number of songs and glees.

On January 28, 1828, he produced "Edward the Black Prince" (erroneously dated 1825 in Grove), and in the same year produced "Don Pedro" and composed an immense number of songs and glees, of which he gives a list.

In 1829 came "Yelva," the libretto of which, except the poetry, was translated by Bishop himself from the French; "Home, sweet home; or, The Ranz des Vaches"; and an adaptation of Boieldieu's "Les deux Nuits," with additional music entitled "The Night before the Wedding," with the usual volumes of songs, composed or arranged.

In 1830 he produced the opera "Ninetta" at Covent Garden, having translated the libretto (except the songs, which were by Mr. Fitzball) from "La Pie Voleuse" and "La Gazza Ladra," the music being principally by the last-named work, with songs by Bishop himself (not in Grove). This was followed by "Hofer" at Drury Lane, the music being arranged from Rossini's "Guillaume Tell," and the cast included Miss Stephens, Madame Vestris, Mrs. Bedford, Messrs. Sinclair, Bedford, and H. Phillips. Next came "Under the Oak," a Vaudeville Opera, performed at Vauxhall Gardens on June 25, and "William and Adelaide," produced at the same place on July 23, whilst he composed a large number of songs, duets, and glees for Vauxhall during the same year.

In 1831 (not 1832) we have "The Romance of a Day," and a number of duets, songs, and glees.

In 1832 we have "Der Alchymist," the music principally adapted from Spohr's operas; "The Demon," with music adapted from "Robert le Diable"; and "The Love Charm," adapted from Auber's "Philtre," neither of which are named in Grove; also "The Magic Fan," "The Sedan Chair," "The Bottle of Champagne," and songs, duets, and glees, all of which were written for and produced at Vauxhall; music for a "Pageant" in commemoration of Sir Walter Scott, performed at Drury Lane, in which occurs the "Coronach" sung by Braham; "The Tyrolean Peasant," an operetta for Drury Lane; and "The Doom Kiss" (not in 1836, as in Grove). In addition to these, during the years 1831-32-33 he adapted and produced at Drury Lane: Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Bellini's "La Sonnambula," Rossini's "Barber of Seville," and Auber's "Maid of Cashmere."

Under 1833 Grove gives "Yelva" and "Rencontre," but, as has been seen, these were produced in 1829 and 1827 respectively. During this year Bishop composed a large number of songs, &c., for Vauxhall; various glees, and a cantata, "The Seventh Day," which was published by Novello, and produced by the Philharmonic Society.

In 1834, in addition to more items for Vauxhall, came "Rural Felicity," "Manfred," and a number of canzonets, &c.

In 1835 he only wrote a few songs, and arranged a large number of Handel's songs. Nothing is given in Grove between 1836 and 1841, and the two works given for 1836 should be under 1832 and 1834.

In 1836 he wrote "The Departure from Paradise," a cantata, with solos composed for and sung by Malibran at the Philharmonic Concerts; a "Crucifixus" for four voices; and an operetta, "The Captain or the Colonel."

In 1837, glees and songs; and in 1838 he brought out the first three volumes of Handel's songs, and also became again Musical Director at Drury Lane, where he produced "La Gazza Ladra," with English words, under the title of "The Maid of Palaiseau"; "Guillaume Tell," and Auber's "Le Philtre." In this year also he composed his Oratorio "The Fallen Angel," which has never been performed.

In 1839 he took the degree of Bachelor of Music at Oxford, and again resumed the reins at Covent Garden, for which he composed "Love's Labour Lost," and wrote additional accompaniments to Arne's "Artaxerxes" and "Beggar's Opera," besides bringing out the fourth and fifth volumes of Handel's songs.

In 1840 he composed and produced at Covent Garden "The Fortunate Isles: a Masque," to celebrate the Queen's wedding, and became director of the "Ancient Concerts," for which he arranged a great many pieces.

In 1841 he wrote several songs and glees, arranged the sixth volume of Handel's songs, and collected and edited all his own glees, trios, quartets, &c., in eight volumes.

Bishop was knighted in 1842, and lived until 1855; but the diary contains no entries after 1841. For further details as to Sir Henry Bishop's distinguished career reference should be made to the excellent article in Grove, as the present paper is not intended to replace that, but only to supplement it from a source not available to that writer.

Few other English composers have been so prolific as Bishop, and no history of music in England can be complete which does not give him the credit he so well deserves.

F. J. W. C.

A HIGHLY interesting essay might be written on the subject of literary men and music. Often with the best of intentions they have written about the divine art in a way calculated to render it ludicrous. Or again, on the strength of an exceedingly superficial knowledge they adopt a patronising tone which is highly irritating. For our own part we greatly prefer the delightful candour of Charles Lamb in his celebrated "Chapter on Ears." Lamb tells us frankly that he had no musical ear. He was "organically incapable of a tune. I have been practising 'God save the King,'" he wrote in 1821, "all my life; whistling and humming of it over to myself in solitary corners; and am not yet arrived, they tell me, within many quavers of it. Yet hath the loyalty of Elia never been impeached." Then he goes on with exquisite humour to surmise that he may, after all, have an undeveloped faculty of music within him. "For, thrumming, in my wild way, on my friend A.'s piano, the other morning, while he was engaged in an adjoining parlour—on his return he was pleased to say, 'he thought it could not be the maid.'" One cannot help admiring Lamb for the heroic courage of his confessions. It was hard, he admitted, to remain as it were "singly unimpressible" to the magic influences of so elevating an art, but he was bound to own that it had caused him a great deal more pain than pleasure. He was constitutionally susceptible of noises. "A carpenter's hammer, in a warm summer noon, will fret me into more than midsummer madness. But these unconnected, unset sounds are nothing to the measured malice of music . . . I have sat through an Italian opera till, for sheer pain and inexplicable anguish, I have rushed out into the noisiest places of the crowded streets to solace myself with sounds which I was not obliged to follow, and get rid of the distracting torment of fruitless, barren attention! I take refuge in the unpretending assemblage of honest common-life sounds; and the purgatory of the Enraged Musician becomes my paradise." Oratorios to him were just as bad, while Concertos were quite pre-eminently insufferable. It would be curious to know whether amongst living men of letters there are any constituted like Lamb in regard of music. If there be any such, we greatly doubt whether they would be as courageous as Elia in the proclamation of their sentiments.

THAT Handel, consciously or unconsciously, conveyed ideas and even notes from the works of other composers into his own, is a well known fact, and one which was recently illustrated on an extensive scale in our March number, in connection with Muffat's "Componenti musicali." But the list of conveyances is not yet complete. Two of which we are about to make mention are, it is true, of small import; yet if the small be taken with the big, it may, perhaps, one day be discovered that Handel never existed. The one is from Mattheson, with whose works Handel must have been familiar. In a Suite in the "Harmonisches Denckmal," published in London, 1714, we find the Allemande commencing and in the volume of Harpsichord Music of the Handel Society Edition, we find, in the second Suite of the third collection, also an Allemande, commencing

The other example is from Buxtehude, another composer, who must have been as well known to Handel as he was to J. S. Bach. In one of Buxtehude's Fugues, the subject runs thus:—

It will scarcely be necessary to give chapter and verse from "The Messiah" suggested by this quotation.

IN our July number we gave a brief description of the first instalment of Gounod's "Mémoires d'un Artiste" published in La Revue de Paris. In the second and third the composer tells us of his visit to Rome, of his delightful journey thither through Monaco, Mentone, Sestri, Genoa, Pisa, Lucca, and Florence. He travelled leisurely in the old-fashioned voiturin, much pleasanter than the modern "obus à rails," which hurries you along "as if you were fish dispatched quickly, so as still to be fresh on arrival." Of the Eternal City, with its churches, its palaces, and its monuments of the past; of the people whom he met there, and, above all, of M. Ingres, Director of the Académie de France, who both by precept and example instilled into the students an intelligent love of art; of the delightful environs of Rome; of the visits to Naples, Florence, and Venice; of all these things Gounod has much to say; and many an eloquent line might be quoted. Here, however, we must restrict ourselves to a few passages specially connected with music and musicians.

GOUNOD'S intense admiration for Mozart's "Don Juan" is well known. In M. Ingres he found an alter ego. They used to sit together of an evening at the pianoforte, playing and singing from the score, until Madame Ingres had to come and remind them that the night was far spent. Of a Sunday, Gounod generally went to the Sistine Chapel, and he speaks of Michael Angelo and Palestrina, those two "intelligences privilégiées" who made of that Chapel a monument unique in the world. "There are some works," he justly observes, "which must be seen or heard in the place for which they were created." From the church he passes to the stage. The latter, however, interested him but little; the répertoire consisted, for the most part, of operas by Bellini, Donizetti, and Mercadante, "so many plants twined around that robust Rossinian trunk, of which they had neither the sap nor the majesty; works which seemed to disappear under the momentary brightness of their ephemeral foliage." At Rome Gounod made the acquaintance of Fanny Hensel, Mendelssohn's sister, who was spending the winter of 1840-1 there with her husband. He describes her as "a musician hors ligne, a remarkable pianist, a woman of superior mind, small, delicate, but whose deep-set eyes and animated countenance betokened energy." She used to play a quantity of Bach's music, and many of her brother's compositions "qui furent pour moi autant de révélations d'un monde ignoré." A reference to M. Ingres leads our author to speculate on the nature of art. "It is neither the Ideal alone nor the Real alone; like man himself, it is the meeting together, the union of both. It is unity in duality. By the Ideal alone, it is above us; by the Real alone, below us. Morals are the humanizing, the incarnation of the Good; science, that of the True; art, that of the Beautiful." On leaving Italy, Gounod went to Germany. At Berlin he renewed his intercourse with the Hensels, and at Leipzig he made the acquaintance of Mendelssohn himself. "He questioned me about my studies, and took lively and sincere interest in my compositions. I had to sit down before the pianoforte and play to him my most recent attempts, and I received from him most precious words of approval and encouragement." The master made him a present of a volume of Bach's Motets. Of Mendelssohn, Gounod remarks that "he was cut off in the prime of life—thirty-eight years old—from the admiration which he had conquered, from the masterpieces which the future held in store for him." The modest manner in which the writer refers to his first attempts at opera is worthy of note. "Sapho," produced in 1851, he tells us, "was not a success." Gounod believed that one might fairly well assert that a dramatic work receives from the public favour proportionate to its merits. It is not given to every composer to form such a calm opinion, especially when his own work is concerned. He reminds us that success on the stage is the result of many elements; the absence of some of them, even of the most accessory, suffices at times to weigh against the highest qualities. "There are works," he adds, "which have not failed to obtain the admiration of artists, but which have not won the favour of the public for lack of the necessary seasoning to render them acceptable to those to whom the pure attraction of intellectual beauty is not sufficient." "La Nonne Sanglante" disappeared for good from the bills after the eleventh performance; a new director declared that "une pareille ordure" could no longer be tolerated.

A RECENT number of the Musical Courier contains an interesting article from Mr. Macdonald Smith on the subject he has made his own in his system "From Brain to Keyboard," which seems to be already spreading in America. As of interest and possibly of profit to those unaccustomed to think of movements of their fingers and arms as subject to most of the physical laws governing inanimate mechanism, we quote one passage:—

Have you ever had the pleasure of playing upon one of the new electric organs and of creating chords at a distance, so noiselessly as to fancy them the actual incarnation of your musical thought? You have dozens, perhaps hundreds of keys and buttons within easy reach; you are a good organist, and as long as all the mechanism of your organ is perfect you are a happy man, for your music seems reproduced as you think it. And all the communication between your keys and the pipes is along so many wires bound up in a single cable!

In the human body we have an exact counterpart of this electric cable and electric action. The nerve, consisting of hundreds and thousands of nerve fibres, all properly insulated, like the electric wires, runs from a certain number of nerve cells to a certain number of corresponding muscular fibres in a precisely similar manner to that in which the organ cable runs from the electric keys and buttons to the valves which make the pipes speak, only we have in our body several cables instead of one. Just as the organ pipes "speak" upon depressing the electric keys, so do the muscular fibres "speak," or rather "contract," on the corresponding nerve cells in the brain being excited. And they respond even more instantaneously and perfectly than the pipes if they are all in order—i.e., in a state of perfect health and development—for just as it is of no use the finest organist in the world attempting the performance of a complicated organ work on a ramshackle one-manual country organ, nor upon the finest electric organ if a quarter of the notes and stops are dumb or otherwise imperfect, so it is little use having in our brain musical genius and beautiful rows of keys—i.e., sets of nerve cells—unless the machinery of nerve and muscle is also perfect, so that the fingers really carry out at once exactly what they are ordered from the nerve cells to perform.

In view of the depreciation of Handel so much in vogue in certain circles, it is interesting to know how far this attitude was forestalled in previous generations. Of course we all know about the rivalry of Handel and Buononcini which divided society into factions much like those of the Byzantine Empire. But it is worth recalling that Horace Walpole, of whom Mr. Lecky remarks that "his cold heart and feebly fastidious taste was usually incapable of appreciating any high form of excellence," sneered at Handel as he afterwards sneered at Garrick, while it was quite "the thing" in the smart society of the time to ridicule the Oratorios of the great Saxon. This fashion is curiously illustrated in the following very characteristic passage in Fielding's "Tom Jones": "It was Mr. Weston's custom every afternoon, as soon as he was drunk, to hear his daughter play on the harpsichord; for he was a great lover of music, and, perhaps, had he lived in town, might have passed as a connoisseur, for he always excepted against [i.e., objected to] the finest compositions of Mr. Handel; he never relished any music but what was light and airy." In this context one may be excused for quoting the lines from Smollett's poem "Advice":

Again shall Handel raise his laurelled brow,
Again shall harmony with rapture glow!
The spells dissolve, the combination breaks,
And Punch, no longer Fraasi's rival, squeaks.
Lo, Russel falls a sacrifice to whim,
And starts amazed in Newgate from his dream.

The point of these lines resides in the fact that Russel was a famous mimic and drawing-room entertainer of the time, who was engaged by certain ladies of quality to set up a puppet show in opposition to Handel's Oratorios. "When the current of fashion changed," says Smollett, in a footnote, "Russel sank into debt, and was confined in Newgate, where he lost his reason. A small subscription was with difficulty raised among his patronesses to procure his admission into Bedlam." On the whole, it cannot be said that Handel's opponents—in the eighteenth century, at any rate—had any reason to congratulate themselves on the issue of the conflict.

It is generally said, and with truth, that serious music in London takes a rest during the months of August and September, and it will therefore probably amaze readers from afar to be told that symphonies, concertos, and classic overtures were to be heard almost nightly at Promenade Concerts in the palatial Queen's Hall during the fast waning holiday season. The excellence of the programmes offered by Mr. Robert Newman, with the co-operation of a high-class orchestra, and Mr. Henry J. Wood as a conductor of marked intelligence, was noted from the first, and it is gratifying to note that Jullien's "British Army Quadrilles" and vulgar effusions of every sort have been shelved, let us hope for ever. Steadily the standard of excellence, both in the arrangement of the nightly entertainments and in the manner of interpretation, has progressed, and the following may be taken as an example of the sort of fare presented to that large section of the British public which prefers to assimilate music and a good cigar at the same time:—Monday, Wagner night; Tuesday, Sullivan night; Wednesday, classical night; Thursday, Schubert night; Friday, Beethoven night; and Saturday, Popular night; the "Popular" programme containing pieces by Gounod, Grieg, Mendelssohn, and other high-class composers. It is pleasant also to note that the best music has attracted much the largest audiences. Let these facts be read, marked, learned, and inwardly digested.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us the following extract from an unpublished MS. diary of a visit to France in the year 1735. Under the date August 28 and September 8 (the old and new style being both given) the writer describes his attendance at a Concert in the great Concert-room of the Palace of the Tuileries, at which the number of performers, both vocal and instrumental, was about eighty. He then continues: "The performance was of Church music as well as French and Italian compositions. The first fiddle was played by Guignon, an Italian, a very fine hand, one of the King's musicians, and they say but very few exceed him in Europe. We also heard the German flute, in its highest perfection. Blavet, a Frenchman, played some pieces of music on which it gave us great pleasure and surprise, for he is allowed by the best judges to perform better on that instrument than any man in the world." The mention of the "German flute" so far back as 160 years ago is curious, as it marks that territorial method of designating instruments which modern facilities of inter-communication have well nigh annihilated. People have nowadays practically ceased to speak of the French horn: the only member of the modern orchestra which still retains this national prefix is the English horn. In this connection one is tempted to notice the changes which have taken place in the course of the last thirty years in the spelling as well as the nomenclature of various instruments. The picturesque title "Kettledrums" has been quite superseded by the Italian form timpani, which we spell in the Italian way, while the old-fashioned form "clarinet" has yielded to the version "clarinet," modelled on the French and Italian form.

"We think it rather hard on music," writes a reviewer in the St. James's Gazette, "that it should be made responsible for so much madness in modern fiction." Hear! hear! Only that we should be inclined to add "maudlin nonsense" as well. In the novel under discussion the heroine is a musical genius, at least, so the author assures us; as to her insanity, there can be no manner of doubt whatever. She writes in her diary: "I have no innate sense of right and wrong," and certainly her conduct is on a par with this candid confession. In this diary, again, she declares at the outset that music is untranslatable into any imagery but its own; but unfortunately lapses from this doctrine—an admirably sound one in her case—and takes to explaining musical illustrations by trees, flowers, stars, and so forth. Finally, she produces a wonderful "opera without words" which wins her immediate renown and admission into a lunatic asylum. What a pity it is, in the interest of the public, that authors of this sort cannot invent some means of writing "books without words"! It is too bad that music should be so constantly made the stalking-horse of the decadent novelist. Some of the most lurid novels of this generation—"The Kreutzer Sonata," "Keynotes," and "Discords"—have all been given musical names. Is there no means by which music can be legitimately avenged on its traducers?

LITTLE notice has been taken of Girolamo Parabosco, an Italian composer of the early part of the sixteenth century, celebrated in his day as a performer on the clavicembalo. And he was not only a skilful musician, but an author of considerable note. Some of his works—he wrote tales, poems, letters—passed through several editions. He was one of the few composers of early times who could also wield the pen. In a subsequent issue we shall have something to say about his life and writings. Also something about his harpsichord music, and this ought to prove of special interest, seeing that Parabosco departed this life presumably before 1557, nearly seventy years before our Byrd. We may add that in some dictionaries of music Parabosco is not even mentioned.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

WANTED, an explanation of the following local criticism on the heavy scoring of some of the solos in M. Tinel's "St. Francis": "This might be cited as an anachronism of the work, which, however, may be supposed to give it some of its originality."

THE following appeared in an Edinburgh paper not long since, as a two-line advertisement: "Pianoforte Instruction.—Beginners, 3d. per lesson. Hours, 4 till 10, evening." I miss the cup of tea and bun.

IF the Cape Mercury be right, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé have taken to singing. Here is a paragraph cut, by a South African correspondent, from the columns of my contemporary:

The well known vocalists, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé, assisted by Miss Marie Füllinger and Mr. William Wild, will give one of their high-class entertainments in the Town Hall on Friday evening next. The press of the Colony are unanimous in praise of this talented combination, and we are sure they will be well received here. Our old friend, Mr. Tom A. Conby, is engineering them through the country.

It is just as likely that Miss Füllinger has taken to the violin, and Mr. William Wild to the pianoforte.

THE question of Sunday entertainments has of late occupied no little attention. While, however, grave minds are considering what is good for the people, the people would seem to be deciding the matter for themselves. Most frequenters of Hyde Park are aware of the impromptu audiences that listen to the discussion of various subjects by energetic orators whose zeal is greater than their knowledge or discretion. Of late, however, a new departure has been made in favour of music, and it is now possible to hear operatic excerpts given in a manner that would surprise (in more senses than one) the oldest opera-goer. A favourite excerpt is the Miserere Scene from "Il Trovatore." A small box-like structure serves for the tower in which Manrico is imprisoned, and Leonora sings in appropriately grief-stricken desperation at a becoming distance. The absence of instrumental accompaniment prevents the vocalists doing the music full justice, but it serves to accentuate their courage and vigorous attack. The end of the scene is taken at a pace that is suggestive of a gavotte, but in other respects the traditions of the Royal Opera are faithfully preserved, even to Manrico coming forth from his prison to bow his acknowledgments of the applause. With selections from "Faust" being played by Her Majesty's bands at one end of the park, and "Il Trovatore" being acted by the people at the other, will anyone dare to say the English nation is not progressing?

THERE has been some correspondence in the public prints regarding the origin of what is known as "The Bishop's Psalm"—an effusion given out by a parish clerk to be sung in honour of an episcopal visit. It is claimed for Devonshire, and also for Wiltshire (Bradford). Between these two I cannot decide, but I knew the doggerel as current in Gloucestershire fifty years ago. The first verse there ran:

Why skip 'ee zo, 'ee little 'ills?
Ee mountains why d'ye op?
Is it because y're glad to zee
'Is grace the lard bishop?

DEVONSHIRE is fertile in parish clerk stories. When visiting in that county some time ago, my host told of a dispute between the gentleman who officiated in the hold of the "three-decker" and his colleague who led the choir. The question was who should fix the metrical psalms for singing. Matters came to a head one Sunday, when the clerk announced the 100th Psalm, "All people that on earth do well." Up rose the chief of the choir and exclaimed, "Dom 'All people that on earth do well,' 'My soul, praise the Lord!'"

THE printer's boy is now in Southampton and has a post on the local Times. To his mischievous and ingenious spirit we, doubtless, owe the information that Mendelssohn wrote a duet, "Rolling in foaming billows," and that among the pieces in a certain programme were a "prelude and figure by Bach"; also that Batiste wrote an "offertory," and that "For the mountains shall depart" is an air in the "Creation." The boy will soon be unable to excel himself if he go on at this rate.

I HAVE authority for stating that Mr. Edward Lloyd will not go to America during the approaching season there. It is, indeed, unlikely that the eminent tenor will ever re-visit our transatlantic cousins.

Who are the true critics?—those who pose as such, or the unsophisticated children of nature? I have just read that an Arapahoe Indian put a nickel in the slot of a phonograph and, on hearing a high note from a famous prima donna, wrapped his blanket around him and fled.

WE all know of a delicate American lady who put garments on the legs of her pianoforte. I now hear of another who, during the mourning for her departed husband, played only on the black keys.

MASCAGNI is said to be writing music to Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream." Is another setting wanted after the exquisite music of Mendelssohn? But perhaps the opportunity for another Intermezzo was not to be resisted.

EVERYONE who knows the tune called "Coronation," usually sung to "All hail the power of Jesu's name," will be interested in the following inscription on a tomb in Shirley cemetery, Mass.: "Here sleeps the sweetest singer, OLIVER HOLDEN, composer of the tune Coronation. Born in Shirley, September 18, 1765. Died in Charlestown, September 4, 1844. To his dear memory this tablet is placed by his granddaughter."

THE Western Daily Mail has made a contribution to Festival anecdotes:—

One of our best-known singers, who was at the Gloucester Festival, and who is now taking part in the musical function at Cardiff, overheard the following conversation during her stay in the Cathedral city: "Yes, I think it is a great shame. They brought down Mr. Cowen to conduct his 'Transfiguration,' and they brought down Dr. Parry to conduct his 'King Saul'; they might just as well have brought Mr. Purcell to conduct his 'Te Deum.'" "Yes, indeed, it was a great oversight." The speakers were two very fashionably dressed young ladies.

THE towns of Cardiff and Swansea are said to be jealous of each other, and it is now reported that the place last-named is thinking of establishing a Musical Festival like its big neighbour. I hope the Swansea folk will do no such foolish thing. There should be a Glamorgan Musical Festival, covering the entire county, with Welsh and English working harmoniously together. This might result in magnificent success.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

UNDER the happily usual conditions of brilliant weather, and the promise of much social as well as artistic enjoyment, the 172nd Festival of the Three Choirs began at Gloucester, on the 10th ult. These music meetings are in some respects unique—unique, certainly, in the charm of their locale and surroundings; in the impressive association of glorious architecture with equally glorious music, and, I may add, in the cheery atmosphere of hospitality and gracious companionship which prevails. Long may they flourish, for these reasons, as well as others; long will they flourish if bigotry and narrow-mindedness can do no more against them than has been accomplished down to the present time. Rarely does a Festival pass without the voice of oburgation from some quarter which our American cousins would style "disgruntled." At Gloucester it was a "Member of the Diocesan Mission" who bore his testimony to the wickedness of what was going on round about him. "The Cathedral mapped out like a concert-room!" he shrieked; "places in the House of God bought and sold! singers highly paid!" and so on, and so on, through the round of familiar outcries. A few persons troubled to answer the Missioner (a layman); the rest faintly smiled, as at an old joke, and the clerical members of the Mission promptly and publicly repudiated what their lay brother had advanced. So ended, in fiasco, the latest crusade against an institution venerable by its age, noble in its artistic achievements, and praiseworthy in its charitable purpose. If a layman condemned, two dignitaries of the Church blessed the Festival; even Bishop Barry, the leader of the Worcester revolt twenty years ago, preached an eloquent sermon in praise of the higher music exemplified on these occasions, while the Dean of Bristol was ardent in advocacy, and that without spoiling the grace of his deliverance by needless injunctions to remember that a Cathedral is not precisely the same as a concert-room. Apropos, I observed that the offensive placards usually affixed to the pillars of the nave on these occasions were conspicuous by their absence. In our decent days no one beneath a Cathedral roof is likely to offend the rule of reverence, least of all when under the influence of sacred music.

The Festival arrangements were on the usual scale, and need not be described further than to say that a London orchestra of about seventy, with Mr. Alfred Burnett in the place so long occupied by Mr. Carrodus, was associated with a Gloucestershire chorus of some 250. The plan of drawing all the voices from within the county was again carried out with entire success, and is now not likely to be abandoned. This is to the credit of the shire, which may also, with some pride, claim the honour of having given birth to four of the solo vocalists and acted as the nursing mother to one more. As in 1892, the orchestra was built against the screen at the east end of the nave, in order to have the advantage of the Cathedral organ, which did excellent service throughout the week, in the hands of Mr. Sinclair (Hereford), Mr. Blair (Worcester), and Mr. Capener, deputy-organist of Gloucester.

It is not my intention to go through the list of performances with the detail which the critics of the daily journals amply provided. In this limited space many things must be taken for granted; the rendering of "Elijah," for example, in which the only feature of comparative novelty was Mr. Andrew Black's impersonation of the Prophet. This gave very considerable satisfaction by its complete dignity and adequate vocal skill, as well as by a good measure of dramatic force. It is very difficult to follow Mr. Santley in this part, and, while he is in recollection, what seems but a moderate success with the public is really one upon which the performer may be congratulated. Madame Albani, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Mr. Lloyd took part in Mendelssohn's work, at which the attendance was a "record"—3,600, or some 500 over the previous highest. Mendelssohn is not yet moribund, it would appear. Truth to tell, the public, though not superior persons, know when they possess a good thing, and hold on with quiet disdain of those who offer something else. On Tuesday evening the attendance was much smaller, and, perhaps, represented only the more cultured taste of the community. The average man held that Mozart's "Requiem," Beethoven's Symphony in C, and Purcell's "Te Deum" made up a heavy programme, and he was right, perhaps, from his point of view. But we are not all average men, some being on lower and others on higher planes. Those above were content with the works provided. Not often can the sublime Mass for the Dead be heard in a great Cathedral, and Purcell's "Te Deum," in its original form, was alone worth going to hear. The version used was that of Dr. J. F. Bridge, who may be congratulated upon restoring to the world a veritable masterpiece. This is a different thing from the extended and diluted composition patched up by irreverent Dr. Boyce, whose name now stands among the most shameful of those that find ignoble employment in "touching up the masters," and compared with whom the fashionable "restorer" of ecclesiastical architecture is a harmless person. How mighty and impressive are many of the choral passages in this noble work, which should never be heard without present consciousness of the fact that the "Te Deum" is a production of the seventeenth century, and saw the light when Bach and Handel were little boys. We cannot sufficiently honour Henry Purcell, who was a prophet in his day and generation, and foretold that which should come on the wings of the advancing spirit of his art. Antique long trumpets were necessarily used, and their silvery tones, ranging far beyond the reach of the modern instrument, produced a truly striking and appropriate effect. The solo vocalists who had the honour of sharing in this performance were Miss Jessie King and Mr. Watkin Mills—competent both. In the "Requiem" these artists were joined by Miss Anna Williams and Mr. Ben Davies.

Dr. Hubert Parry's "King Saul" took up the whole of Wednesday morning, the composer conducting. Here was another display of the county talent, but the work need not be discussed here. It has passed under many critical eyes, and the only drawback it suffers from is excessive length. The composer, of course, could set this right, but do we not know that he would acutely feel any injunction to use the knife upon his own offspring? It is, however, necessary to give pain sometimes for the sake of ultimate good health, and Dr. Parry, I suggest, would be well advised were he to shorten the Oratorio yet a little more. The performance, generally good, was much indebted to the services of the principal vocalists, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Lloyd (David), Mr. Bispham (Saul), and Mr. Andrew Black (Samuel). Although a novelty in Gloucester "Saul" drew a large audience, helped, no doubt, by the local connection and personal popularity of the gifted composer. In the evening of this day took place the one Concert which is all that remains of the secular part of the Festival. Races, balls, and entertainments of "worldly" music—all have gone save a solitary performance in the Shire Hall, which was attended, this year, by less than 700 persons, although Madame Albani and the pick of the artists took part. I would sweep away the fragment, notwithstanding the objection of ladies who want to show off a smart gown. The secular Concert, as now held, is a sacrifice alike of good taste and opportunity. It is incongruous and ineffective. As regards that under notice, I have only to say, first, that the programme was far too long; second, that Mrs. Katherine Fisk made a successful Festival début and should be in future request; third, that the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society sang extremely well, under Mr. Riseley's direction, but sang too much; fourth, that Miss Rosalind Ellicott's new Fantasia for pianoforte (Miss Sybil Palliser) and orchestra is a respectable but wholly undistinctive piece of work. It would be well for ladies to hold their hands from composition till the time comes when they are privileged to say something which has not been heard before.

Brahms's "Song of Destiny" opened the Thursday's work and was indifferently sung, perhaps because the chorus had, on the previous evening, been junketting with the Mayor of Gloucester somewhere up the river. Work first, "high jinks" after, is a good rule. Following the Brahms piece came two novelties, one close upon the heels of the other, with Mr. Cowen's "Transfiguration" leading the way. The libretto of this work is modelled upon the Church Cantatas of Bach, and consists, therefore, of a Scriptural narrative with reflections interspersed. The idea represents the Christian Church as longing to see their Lord in His glory; the answer to which is the Transfiguration, with the Apocalyptic description of the Redeemer in heaven by way of Finale. In his musical illustration of this theme, we have Mr. Cowen's first effort on the field of sacred art; his pastoral, "Ruth," being but a secular story tempered by religious feeling and motive. The composer, therefore, came to his work with freshness, and, I should say, the elation of spirit that generally attends a new departure. It has been urged that as an adherent of the Jewish faith, he was not competent to deal with a Christian subject. Surely that is pushing objection too far. Must a composer be a Mahomedan before he can put music to a Moslem theme? Was Mendelssohn any the less qualified to illustrate "Antigone" because not a Pagan? Really, there should be some discretion in finding grounds for attack, if attack we must. To my mind, Mr. Cowen has dealt very finely with his subject, especially in the choruses. It is something to have written such a touching piece of devotional music as "O Jesus, none but Thee," and such a bold, sustained, and majestic utterance as the final chorus, "Unto Him which is." Among solos, the tenor air "Who would not fear Thee" stands conspicuous for high vocal quality and true expression, while Mr. Cowen's skill in recitative is proved by a truly dramatic setting of words describing the ascended and glorified Christ. Nearly every page in this work is fresh and original, the outcome of one who takes his own view of things and acts upon it. Only from such a source could we have received the very characteristic orchestral movement entitled "The Transfiguration," wherein themes representative of the Saviour and of "saints adoring, guardian angels," are worked up in masterly though unfamiliar style. Having made such an appearance as a composer of sacred music, Mr. Cowen should follow it up. The solos were safe in the hands of Madame Henson, Miss Wilson, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Bispham. Mr. Lloyd's delivery of "Who would not fear Thee" was a masterpiece of singing. Dr. C. Harford Lloyd supplied the second novelty—a Concerto in F minor for organ and orchestra. This work contains the usual three movements, and will be most esteemed, perhaps, for the second of the three, which is an exceedingly pleasing and ingenious piece, introducing with great effect one of the characteristic tunes played by the Gloucester Cathedral chimes—when they are in order, which is not just now. The entire work is scholarly, and, as such things go, unconventional. Indeed, I am disposed to say that it places the composer's powers, as an abstract musician, in a more striking light than any previous effort. Dr. Lloyd conducted, and the organ was played in masterly style by Mr. Sinclair, who is, I need scarcely say, an organist hors ligne. A fairly good performance of Beethoven's Mass in C brought the morning session to an end. Conspicuous in the evening programme was a new Church cantata, "A Dedication," composed for the Festival by the conductor, Mr. C. Lee Williams. A work in this form was contributed by Mr. Williams both in 1889 and 1892. His subjects then, however, were exceedingly solemn, whereas "A Dedication" is jubilant, and the change has enabled him to show that he is as efficient in the one case as in the other. The cantata is intended for use at the consecration of a church, at dedication anniversaries, &c., and, being the only one of its kind, is likely to come into use. Its "argument," if the term may stand, is that a procession approaches and enters the house set apart for God; that prayers are offered for the presence of the Almighty, whose glory thereupon, as at the consecration of the Temple, fills the sacred building. Then follow praise and rejoicing, led by the only solo voice (baritone) employed. Throughout the work Mr. Williams has written with needful simplicity, but, as is his wont, with musicianly skill and purely devotional expression. There could be nothing more appropriate to the theme, or more adapted to the avowed purpose of the composition. The cantata met with almost unanimous favour, as a thoroughly honest work, high in value and poor in mere pretence. A good performance gained much by the admirable singing of Mr. Watkin Mills, who gave the solos with all requisite dignity and power. The same artist took the solo in Schütz's "Lamentatio Davidi," which example of noble antiquity had its austerity kept well in countenance by the strong, stern architecture of the Norman nave. The "Hymn of Praise," with Miss Anna Williams, Miss Franklin Higgs, and Mr. Ben Davies as soloists, closed the evening selection. Doubtless the large audience had chiefly been attracted by this favourite work, which seems rather to increase than diminish in popularity as time goes on.

Friday brought "The Messiah" as usual, and with it an enormous congregation, which filled every part of the Cathedral, choir included. Upon this I need not dwell, while, as regards the special closing service, it is enough to say that Miss Beatrice Gough well sang the solo in Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," and that a new setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis revealed the presence of a Church composer from whom much may reasonably be anticipated. Mr. Brewer knows how to write with sentiment without descending to the maudlin and lackadaisical.

The Festival was attended by over 14,000 persons—twenty more than in 1892; and the receipts for tickets were £3,420—about £100 less than three years ago. This, with an increase in artists' fees, &c., left a deficit on the working. The general account, however, comes out thus: Receipts, including stewards' fees, £4,491; expenditure, £3,850; balance payable to the charity, £641. The collections amounted to a much smaller sum than usual, £422. Nevertheless, the charity will benefit, from all sources, to the extent of about £1,350—a sum worth working for. Let my last word be in praise of the new and very able secretary, Mr. P. Barrett Cooke, and of the accomplished and genial conductor, Mr. Lee Williams. The Festival was fortunate in their services.

CARDIFF MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THREE years ago the guarantors of this Festival had to meet a deficit of £700, more or less. They made it good, and resolved to try again. They have tried again, and now I hear that the gentlemen in question may have to disburse £500. This is better, but the patience of those who pay may not last till the accounts balance themselves; and the outlook is, therefore, quite uncertain. The whole situation will have to be reviewed, and fresh measures taken to enlist a greater amount of patronage by appealing to a wider area of sympathy. This is scarcely the place for initiating discussion—a task devolving upon those who are responsible. I can only hope that wise measures may be adopted and carried out with success. One thing is certain: let this great Glamorganshire community be properly organised and inspired, and we shall see another music meeting as important as those of Birmingham and Leeds.

The Festival which opened in Park Hall, on the 18th ult., was purely an affair of Cardiff, which town supplied the whole of the chorus and the courage needed to bring down from London a costly orchestra and a yet more expensive company of solo vocalists. The one thing that Cardiff neglected was to supply adequate audiences. That demanded co-operation from the many and the many held aloof. This, however, does not affect the question of artistic desert and liberal provision of good things. Of these matters it is my main business to speak.

The opening of the Festival was not encouraging. A great part of the programme was taken up by the Oratorio "St. Francis," in which the Belgian composer, Edgar Tincl, set forth an idea of sacred drama under the impression, apparently, that it is new. This work was once performed, with limited means, at Westminster Town Hall, and has been introduced by Sir Charles Hallé both to Manchester and Liverpool. At Cardiff nothing was known of it, but the music made a most favourable impression upon the chorus in rehearsal, and efforts were put forth to excite public feeling on its behalf. But nothing could stir pervading apathy into life. The question arose, "Who is Mr. Tincl?" and this may, in some cases, have been followed up by another, "Who was St. Francis?" Anyhow, the audience that came to satisfy themselves with regard to both one and the other might have been comfortably accommodated in a much smaller room. This was depressing, but, apparently, did not depress. Mr. Tincl conducted his Oratorio with unflagging energy, and all under him worked with a will, while from time to time the "house" made up for paucity of numbers by a disproportionate volume of applause. At the applause nobody could marvel, for the work contains much pleasing music and a great deal which, if not of distinguished merit au fond, is so decked out that the surface adornment satisfies and few care to go deeper. That the English public will ever accept "St. Francis" as an Oratorio is doubtful, or, perhaps I should say, not doubtful, seeing that the librettist has begun with his hero when he was of the world, worldly, and a shining ornament in the society of the period. To a display of him in this mundane capacity and to the supernatural call which changed his life, fully one-third of the "Oratorio" is devoted. Hence it is that the work opens with the music of revelry and of the dance, which runs on and on through scores of pages, pleasingly enough, no doubt, but perplexing to those who think that the hero is kept so long waiting for his entry. We get abundance of music but little of the future Saint, who, throughout, is less musical himself than a cause of music in others. The second part deals with the monastic life of the erstwhile gallant, who now has to endure the mocking of his former boon companions, by whom a marriage to the Lady Poverty seems little understood and less appreciated. In the third part St. Francis makes a pious end in a space of time remarkably brief by contrast with the prolonged lamentations raised above his remains and the jubiliations with which his apotheosis is celebrated by way of Finale. In the respect just pointed out the work is badly constructed, the Saint being often a mere lay figure upon which to hang a succession of varied garments. This, perhaps, was to the taste of Mr. Tincl, who can write in a variety of styles; dealing with the lighter kinds admirably and, at more serious moments, knowing how to conceal poverty of thought by outward decoration. If I were asked to describe the Oratorio in a word, I should call it "flashy." It shows much ability and a great deal of the music appeals to popular taste, but the striving after effects is too obvious, and the effects themselves are often strained. If it be true, as says a great critic, that he who cannot conceal his art has not begun to be an artist, Mr. Tincl has yet much to learn. I cannot, in the limited space now available, enter into particulars concerning "St. Francis," but space must be found in which to state that the audience did not assume a critical attitude towards the work, but, finding in it much to admire, and justly, accepted the whole without question. It was evident that great pains had been taken in preparation. With few exceptions the performance ran smoothly through its very extended course, and the composer had reason to thank his more prominent interpreters, Madame Medora Henson, Mr. Ben Davies (St. Francis), Mr. Whitney Mockridge, Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, and Mr. Douglas Powell. Madame Henson, it should be stated, took the place of Miss Ella Russell, and had the music put into her hands only three days before, together with that of three other works she had not previously studied. Her correct singing in all these was a genuine achievement, worthy of the highest praise. The balance of the first Concert was made up by selections from Wagner, with Mr. Whitney Mockridge as an acceptable vocalist.

The evening of Wednesday brought with it the greatest curiosity of the Festival. We could all understand the indifference shown to "St. Francis," and many of us said that the attendance at "St. Paul" would tell a different tale. But the prophets prophesied falsely, the hall being no better filled for the one than for the other. This was a puzzle, because if Mendelssohn, with Madame Albani among his interpreters, cannot draw a good "house," who can? Such a public would not be affected though one rose from the dead. However, there was the phenomenon; far too evident to be doubted, far too strange to be accounted for. The Oratorio, nevertheless, was well performed, with the eminent assistance of the following artists: Madame Albani, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Mockridge, and Mr. Watkin Mills, the last-named a thoroughly good representative of the Apostle. The chorus sang even better than in the morning, having more straightforward and familiar work to do.

The first Concert on Thursday introduced two novelties—namely, Professor Stanford's setting of Gray's "Bard," and a cantata, "A Psalm of Life," from the pen of Mr. David Jenkins, Professor of Music at the University of Wales, Aberystwyth. These were preceded in performance by Verdi's "Requiem" and separated by Mozart's Symphony in G minor, of which it may be said at once that the orchestra gave an excellent account. The "Requiem" had, on the whole, a good interpretation, with Madame Henson, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. Mockridge, and Mr. Watkin Mills as principals. Miss Oliver, who was indisposed, sang only in the concerted music, the solos in her part being most gallantly undertaken by the American soprano, whose readiness and pluck seem to have no limit. I cannot recall another case in which the soprano has done the contralto's work as well as her own. Dr. Stanford's new Ode is an example of a form in which he is accustomed to successes. Preceded by the "Revenge," the Ode on the death of President Lincoln, and others of the same class, the "Bard" had almost an absolute guarantee before a note was heard, and it turned out to be a work suited to its strong, stern theme, and the lurid atmosphere with which the poet's imagination has invested it. In this case the composer varies his procedure by introducing a solo voice (baritone). The reason is obvious when one contemplates the striking individuality of the ancient minstrel and the desirableness of accentuating it by every possible means. The choral portions of the Ode, together with the important orchestral music, follows the composer's own precedent, and moves freely along the course of the poem, recognising no obligation save that of strengthening the force of the words. Dr. Stanford is particularly impressive in dealing with the more sombre passages—the apparitions of departed bards on Arvon's banks and their awful prophecies of disaster in the track of the "ruthless King." All this is dealt with in a broad, elevated, and wholly worthy spirit, which, found more or less throughout the composition, assures its future as a work of art. Thus much of comment must now suffice, for remark in detail other opportunities will surely arise. Mr. Plunket Greene sang the Bard's part with much intensity of utterance. He should however, guard against exaggeration, very little of which serves to spoil what otherwise would be a fine dramatic effort. Turning to Mr. Jenkins's "Psalm of Life," I am bound to say that it does not call for extended discussion. The libretto consists of passages from Psalm cvii., arranged under three heads, and is a good thing of its kind, affording abundant scope for varied and suggestive music. But the fact stands out too clearly that, while here and there Mr. Jenkins has been moved to do his best and show capacity which should have free course, he has written with the tastes and limitations of Welsh choirs in view. A Welsh composer can hardly be blamed for thinking first of his own countrymen, but with such an opportunity as a Festival work affords he should put forth his entire strength. I need not touch upon the various movements. They are all correctly written in a somewhat old-fashioned, perfectly orthodox style, and, I doubt not, will be hailed with satisfaction by those for whom they are intended. Berlioz's "Faust" filled the evening programme, and its audience went some way towards filling the Hall. The work was performed here three years ago, making so great an impression that now, I am told, a large number of miners came down from the hills expressly to hear it. Sir Joseph Barnby secured a good performance, ably supported by Madame Albani, Miss Oliver, Messrs. Ben Davies, Ffrangcon Davies, and Douglas Powell.

Friday morning's programme was composite, opening with the "Last Judgment" and closing with the Choral Symphony, the intermediate selections being a Suite from Mr. German's music to "The Tempter," conducted by the composer, and Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," which, owing to the length of the Concert, had to be omitted. The rendering of Spohr's Oratorio was not entirely free from blemish, but the solo work gave much satisfaction and did credit to the performers, Madame Henson, Miss Butt, Mr. Mockridge, and Mr. Watkin Mills. With regard to the great Symphony, the chorus deserved high praise for attacking the Finale in so resolute a spirit and for surmounting its difficulties with, all things considered, comparative ease. But why did the conductor take much of the work at a speed which, to my mind, had the effect of a disaster? I should say that the Symphony was played in the shortest time on record, but at some cost to its beauty and dignity. The soloists were the artists last named. In the evening came Sullivan's "Light of the World," with the composer to conduct it. To hear the one and see the other came an audience quite respectable in point of numbers, and disposed to be appreciative of both. Sir Arthur had a cordial reception and directed a performance which, but for a single slip, would have been highly satisfactory. The many beauties of the work attracted lively attention, though, as usual, the general effect was not free from monotony. Mesdames Albani, Oliver, and Butt; Messrs. Ben Davies, Ffrangcon Davies, and Douglas Powell gave a good account of all the solos.

Saturday's programme included "The Messiah" and a miscellaneous Concert, about which no comment need be made. The attendances again improved, but the guarantors will have to face a deficit and also the vital question how these Festivals can be carried on so as to secure adequate support.

MR. GERMAN'S MUSIC TO "ROMEO AND JULIET."

MR. EDWARD GERMAN'S new incidental music to Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," produced on the 21st ult. at the Lyceum Theatre, under the management of Mr. Forbes-Robertson and Mr. Frederick Harrison, fully sustains the reputation of this clever young composer. The Orchestral Suite formed from his music, written for the production of "Henry VIII." at this theatre, may be said to be one of the most well-known pieces in our concert-rooms; and although there is less that will widely appeal in his music of the world-known love story, it will not prove less attractive to musicians. The most important number in thematic development is the Prelude, in which the love theme and Juliet theme, and other subjects subsequently heard during the progress of the play, are entwined in a scholarly and effective manner. Next in artistic importance is the "Dramatic Interlude" in D minor which precedes the last act, and which is written in the form of a Funeral march. The music of the ball-room scene will, however, probably prove to be the most popular. This chiefly consists of a rhythmic and melodious Pavane, instinct with courteous refinement and dainty grace. It is very pleasant to hear this again before the fourth act, where it serves as a suggestive and connective link. A charming Pastoral ushers in the second act, and a dreamy Nocturne appropriately prepares the way for the incidents in Act 3. The thematic materials of these numbers are deftly used in Leitmotif fashion during the action, the dramatic significance of which they greatly heighten. It should be added that the music is excellently played by an orchestra of no less than thirty-six executants, under the able direction of Mr. Carl Armbruster.

THE MUNICH WAGNER PERFORMANCES.

THE double "cycclus" of Richard Wagner's operas, from the earliest recognised work, "Die Feen," to the stupendous "Nibelungen" tetralogy, which commenced at the Munich Royal Opera on August 3, was announced to be brought to its final close, on the 27th ult., with a performance of the last-named work. The result, if doubtless satisfactory from a financial point of view, can scarcely be said to have been one of special artistic significance, the performances but rarely rising above the ordinary, certainly high, level to which one is accustomed at the Institution in question. The comparative proximity of Bayreuth moreover to the Bavarian capital was not altogether favourable to the undertaking, and in the eyes of those who had witnessed the representations at the Wagner Theatre, those at Munich, announced as "model" ones, could not fail to suffer by comparison. Still, the appreciation of the general audience was most pronounced, and there can be no doubt that the admiration of the music-dramas of the Bayreuth master, and the more intelligent perception of his ideals generally are still in the ascendant. There was the usual annual influx of tourist visitors, and a Congress of Catholics and similar gatherings taking place in Munich during the time, all of which elements contributed their contingent to the audience at the theatre, which was frequently completely crowded, notwithstanding the fact of the price of seats having been treble that ordinarily charged here. As regards the executive artists, the palm must be awarded to Herr Vogl, if only for the remarkable fact that he sustained, with his well-known verve and vocal and histrionic ability, the leading tenor parts throughout the entire first cycle, with the exception only of that in "Die Feen," Herr Birrenkoven, of Hamburg, having been prevented by illness from sharing the responsibility with his great Munich confère. Other artists belonged to the personnel of the Royal Opera justly obtaining the high appreciation of the audience, notably Frau Moran Olden as Brinnhilde in "Götterdämmerung," Fräulein Frank as a highly dramatic Ortrud in "Lohengrin," Fräulein Dressler as an excellent Brangäne in "Tristan und Isolde," and Herr Gura as Hans Sachs, in the characteristic and spiritualised interpretation of which part, in the opinion of many, he remains facile princeps. Amongst the considerable number of artists specially engaged from other leading German lyrical establishments should be mentioned Frau Sucher, of Berlin (Isolde), whose voice, however, unfortunately suffered from her indisposition; Fräulein Pauline Meilhae, of Carlsruhe (Irene in "Rienzi," Venus in "Tannhäuser"); Herr Carl Perron, of Dresden, an excellent artist, who is likely to be permanently engaged here (Wolfram in "Tannhäuser"); Herr Schelper, of Leipzig, whose Alberich has never yet been approached by any other artist; and Herr Lieban, of Berlin, a clever representative of the cunning dwarf Mime, both in the "Nibelungen" tetralogy. Two extra performances of "Tristan und Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger" were given on August 29 and the 1st ult. respectively, when the part of Isolde, in the former work, was taken by Madame Doxat, the Leipzig prima donna, who scored a distinct success, while Herr Knapp, of Mannheim, fairly roused the enthusiasm of his audience in that of Kurwenal; Frau Staudigl, of Berlin, being the Brangäne. In the latter work Herr Knapp also proved a very acceptable Hans Sachs, Frau Staudigl being the Magdalene, and Herr Nebe, of the Munich Opera, the Beckmesser, while a young tenor, Herr Walter, did his best in the part of Walther von Stolzing. The performances in the first cycle were conducted by Herren Fischer and Richard Strauss. In the second cycle, Herr Levi, the first capellmeister of the Munich Opera, who has only just recovered from illness, also took a share in conducting. Complaints were not unfrequently heard in the course of these representations of the orchestra at times drowning the voices of the singers. The fault probably lies not so much with the conductors, but in the half-measure adopted in the position of the orchestral podium, which is only partly lowered. It was not without excellent reasons that Wagner himself lowered his orchestra altogether out of sight.

THE RUBINSTEIN PRIZE COMPETITION.

THE second International Competition for the Rubinstein Prize—5,000 francs each for composition and pianoforte playing—took place at the Bechstein Hall in Berlin from August 20 to 26 last. The jury, presided over by Professor Johannsen, the director of the St. Petersburg Conservatoire, numbered some twenty representative musicians of different nationalities, including Professor Safonoff, of the Moscow Conservatoire; Dr. Neitzel, of Cologne; Herr Kwast, of the Frankfort Conservatorium; M. Vigelius, of the Helsingfors Conservatorium; Mr. Asger Americk, of Baltimore; M. Diémer, of Paris; M. Widor, representing the Paris Conservatoire; Professor Jadassohn, of Leipzig; and Professors Klindworth and Schultze, of Berlin. The office these gentlemen had met to discharge was no sinecure, seeing that for five days (the intervening Sunday being a dies non), from nine in the morning until one, and again from three until seven o'clock in the evening, it was their business to listen to compositions more or less crude, by candidates whose age had been curiously limited by the founder to between twenty and twenty-six; and, a still more trying ordeal, to judge of the relative merits of a formidable array of pianists, many of whom had selected the same pieces for performance—notably, the Rubinstein Concerto in D minor, which on this occasion "obtained a hearing" no less than twenty-three times. There were only eight aspirants for the composition prize, which was finally awarded to M. Henri Melzer, of Warsaw, upon the merits chiefly of a Concertstück and a Pianoforte Trio. The young Polish laureate was run very close by a Danish competitor, Herr Hamann, whose orchestral and chamber compositions obtained much favour with the jury. In the section for pianoforte playing thirty-three candidates presented themselves to go through the prescribed performances (the conditions of which have been stated in THE MUSICAL TIMES), the prize-winner in this case being a young Russian, M. Lhévinne, of Moscow, whose masterly execution of the Rubinstein Concerto in E flat gained him the suffrages of the jury, who for a time had hesitated between the claims of this candidate and those of M. Staub, pupil of M. Diémer at the Paris Conservatoire. The Berlin New Philharmonic Orchestra assisted in the performances, being most ably conducted by Professor Klindworth. In conclusion, a word of praise should be added concerning the "patient merit" displayed on so trying an occasion by the Bechstein pianoforte used. As the Berlin Vossische Zeitung, in a leading article on the competition puts it: "A most remarkable feat must be held to have been achieved by Bechstein. On one grand pianoforte were played over two hundred pieces, amongst them twenty-six concertos, grand sonatas, and Liszt's fortissimo Studies, and at the finish the instrument sounded as full, pure, and beautiful as at starting." The members of the jury were not allowed to quit the hospitality of the German capital before some of their number had offered a musical tribute of their own. Thus, on a visit paid to the Royal Museum, with its treasures of antique musical instruments, some of them in excellent preservation, M. Diémer was induced to play a Prelude and Fugue and other pieces on the Sebastian Bach clavier exhibited here; while, on another occasion, M. Widor delighted his hearers with the display of his skill on the fine organ in the Apostel Paulus Kirche. The Rubinstein Competition is to take place every five years, and the next concours will, therefore, be held in 1900, at Vienna.

REVIEWS.

Novello's Octavo Anthems. Nos. 496-510.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WE commence this time with "I came not to call the righteous," by Charles Vincent, a brief composition for tenor or treble solo and chorus, with Spohr-like harmonies and progressions. No. 497, "Christ both died and rose again," by E. W. Naylor, is of course for Easter. It is mainly for chorus with an intermediate tenor solo, and the style is generally broad and diatonic, the dogology being especially vigorous. No. 498, "As Moses lifted up the serpent," by Fred. Gostelow, is another example in the solid English church style, with passages for bass and treble soli. One episode for chorus would prove most effective if sung without accompaniment. The semibreves in the third bar of the bass part on the last stave, page three, and in the third bar of the second staff of the treble part on page eight should be minims. "Hallelujah! Christ is risen," for Easter, by Bruce Steane (No. 499), is more modern in phraseology. It is a bright little anthem with brief phrases for tenor and quartet. No. 500 is a setting of the "Miserere" in chant form, by Sir Joseph Barnby. There are several chants, some having a Gregorian feeling while others tend in the direction of lyrical music. The whole is effective and could only have been penned by a consummate musician. No. 501, "Behold, two blind men," by Sir John Stainer, is for general use. Commencing with soli passages we pass to a somewhat extended chorus with fugal passages. The whole is very bold and almost dramatic. No. 502, "I will extol Thee," by Charles M. Hudson, is a full anthem, easy, and indicating the influence of some of the eighteenth century church composers, such as Boyce, King, and Kent. "All Thy works shall praise Thee," by George H. Ely (No. 503), is for Harvest or general use. This was reviewed in our September issue. No. 504, "Lo! the winter is past," by Bernard Farebrother, is peculiarly suitable for springtime, and should be borne in mind by organists and choir-masters. It is expressive and appropriately cheerful, and no solo voices are required. No. 505, Purcell's anthem for Ascension Day, "O all ye people, clap your hands" (edited by Dr. J. F. Bridge), needs no recommendation from us, but a new edition is of course welcome. For the benefit of those who do not know the composition it may be said that it consists of one extended movement, florid of course, and containing much imitative and contrapuntal writing. No. 506, "O be joyful in the Lord," by George C. Martin, is of course a setting of the "Jubilate," specially suitable for choral festivals. Though divided into several sections it is full throughout and is remarkably spirited, and not too difficult for an ordinarily well trained choir. No. 507, "O God, Who hast prepared," by J. Varley Roberts, is for soprano solo and chorus. There is no actual plagiarism, but in key and general style Dr. Roberts's anthem recalls Attwood's familiar "Turn Thy face from my sins." The same composer's "O Saviour of the world" (No. 508) is for male voices only, unaccompanied. It is simple, brief, and hymn-like in character. The penultimate number on our present list is "Let not thine hand be stretched out to receive," by Sir John Stainer, described as for Hospital Sunday, or any other occasion of almsgiving to the poor. Its construction is peculiar, a choral recitative and chorus being followed by a very expressive soprano solo and chorus, the anthem ending with a few bars for bass solo with accompaniment in single notes. This is very effective, conveying as it does a suggestion of pathos, for the words are: "When thou hast enough, remember the time of hunger; and when thou art rich, think upon poverty and need." No. 510 is another fine but little known anthem of Purcell's, "Praise thou the Lord, O Jerusalem," edited by H. Ellis Wooldridge. It commences with an overture, Adagio and Allegro in D minor, the second movement being a brief fugue. Then we have a very lengthy five-part chorus in several sections, the whole finishing triumphantly in D major. It is a noble composition, and it will be performed according to the original score, with strings and organ accompaniment, at the Purcell Bicentenary Festival in Westminster Abbey on November 21 next.

Andante Melancolique. For Violin (or Violoncello) and Pianoforte. By A. Simonetti.

Moments Joyeux. For the Violin and Pianoforte. By William Henley. [G. Ricordi and Co.]

GRACE and refinement are usually prominent in M. Simonetti's compositions, and the present "Andante" is no exception to this rule. Its reflective character is relieved by passages of impassioned nature and a sympathetic player could make it very effective.

In kindly consideration of the needs of those beginning the study of the violin, Mr. Henley has written a series of six pieces in the first position, of which "Moments Joyeux" forms the sixth. It is a bright little piece, well calculated to afford "pleasurable moments"—at least to the performer—and may be recommended to teachers as likely to encourage young students.

Hints on Singing. By Manuel Garcia.
[E. Ascherberg and Co.]

"SINCE the publication of 'L'Art du Chant' (1840), the invention of the laryngoscope and fifty years of additional experience have naturally enabled me to acquire many fresh ideas, and also to clear up my pre-existing doubts. The result of this I now offer to the public in as concise and clear a form as I have found possible." Thus begins the preface of a volume by one who has long been recognised as a leading authority on voice production and singing. Although we cannot agree with the author's statement that "singing is becoming as much a lost art as the manufacture of Mandarin china," and though we cannot but regret that he has adopted for his explanations the tiresome and artificial form of question and answer between an impossible pupil and an all-wise teacher, the book has an obvious value that makes it very welcome. It begins with a clear explanation of the vocal organs, the understanding of which is greatly facilitated by a series of excellent illustrations. The registers and compass of the various voices are next treated, and some valuable remarks are made on vocal timbre, an important matter which has but recently received due attention. Under the heading of "singing coupled with words," vowel sounds are dealt with in a concise but exhaustive manner. Vowel-shades and timbres are happily described as "the physiognomy of the voice," and as an illustration of their delicacy the author says, "let us suppose the question 'Are you coming?' to be put by an imperious master, or an entreating lover, or a threatening accomplice. In each case the same vowel would assume a different ring." In answer to a question by the impossible pupil, "Would not the modification of vowels disfigure the language?" M. Garcia says: "In the utterance of a thought all the vowels are modified in the same proportion; their mutual relation remains unaltered; only as a whole have they taken the tint harmonizing with the passion expressed." Such subtle analysis shows the master mind. Again, with regard to the use of consonants the definition that "through their varied degrees of energy they declare the state of activity of the sentiment, just as the vowels manifest its nature," is admirable, and conducive to the cultivation of that most desirable of all habits in students—namely, precise and clear thinking. The secret of a trained vocalist's success may be said to be given in answer to the question "How can a singer transmit his emotions to an audience?" "By feeling strongly himself. Sympathy is the sole transmitter of emotion, and the feelings of an audience are excited by our own, as the vibrations of one instrument are awakened by the vibrations of another." The musical illustrations are apposite and the vocal exercises well calculated to achieve their object. There are but few singers who may not profit by consulting the pages of M. Garcia's valuable treatise.

Original Compositions for the Organ. Nos. 239-241.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THESE three numbers consist of the several movements of an Organ Sonata in D minor, by John E. West. For many years it has been a practice among booksellers to issue works of fiction in weekly or monthly parts, but it has not obtained much acceptance in the music trade, though there are times when it may offer a convenient method of publication, as, for example, when an organist may require one movement from a sonata or suite but not the entire work. The first section of Mr. West's Sonata, Allegro maestoso, opens with a vigorous and strongly marked theme, 3-4 measure, followed by the usual modulation to the relative major, in which, according to precedent, the second subject is introduced. This is a quiet melody, in excellent contrast to the foregoing. It is worked up, however, to an energetic peroration, after which comes the development of the subject-matter with several transitions of key, eventually leading to the customary recapitulation in which, of course, the second subject is introduced in the tonic major, a Coda for the full organ, also in the major key, bringing an effective but not very difficult movement to a close. We have next an Andante religioso, commencing and concluding in B flat, the orthodox key for the slow movement of a work in D minor. The principal subject is calm and devotional in character, with harmonies which suggest the influence of Spohr. It is repeated with amplified accompaniment, and there is a pianissimo close. An episode, Più mosso, in E flat minor, follows, more agitated in character, and then the principal theme returns in the left hand, with florid triplet accompaniment for the right, this style being continued to the end of the movement. The third portion of the Sonata, headed Allegro pomposo, opens in a bright and dignified manner in the major key, 3-4 time; but this is merely introductory, a well-marked fugue subject being soon given out and developed at some length. After a prolonged dominant pedal the opening theme returns, and the peroration is as brilliant and imposing as could be wished, without being in the least out of character with the dignified style in which the Sonata is written. The work will serve for Recital purposes, or the three movements for use separately as Church Voluntaries.

Talks with Bandsmen. A Popular Hand-book for, Brass Instrumentalists. By Algernon S. Rose.

[W. Rider and Sons.]

THIS is a delightful little book. Its 400 and odd pages contain an enormous amount of solid information conveyed in the pleasantest and most gossipy style imaginable, with anecdotes, allusions, and quotations that speak highly for the author's memory, humour, and culture. There exists, so far as we are aware, no other volume of the kind, for Mr. Rose describes not only the peculiarities of the various instruments used in "military" bands, but also the methods of their manufacture, and tells us a great deal concerning the history of the improvements effected by various makers and inventors, includes a directory for bandsmen, and also gives numerous illustrations of the instruments, the workshops in which they are made, and the men who make them. Indeed, so much information has been packed into this by no means bulky tome (an ordinary pocket will easily hold it) that what it does not contain on the subject of instruments of brass and of percussion may safely be spoken of as not worth knowing. When we add that eight copies of the book may be purchased for a sovereign, it will be gathered that Mr. Rose has been as thoughtful of the pockets of those for whom he has so admirably catered as of their mental needs.

The Message of the Rose. Song. Words by John Muir. Music by T. Hague Kinsey.

The Good Shepherd. Words by Longfellow. Music by T. Hague Kinsey.

Huntsman's Love. Three short Poems. By Em. Geibel. Set to music by Carl Courvoisier.

To the Night. Words by P. B. Shelley. Music by Carl Courvoisier.

[Liverpool: The Music Publishing Co-operative Society, Limited.]

MR. KINSEY writes in sympathy with his text and in a manner which is grateful to the vocalist. These merits are specially noticeable in the first of the above songs, which is a good specimen of the modern drawing-room style.

The second song is most suitable to a mezzo-soprano voice. As it is stated that orchestral parts may be had of the publishers, the composer presumably intends it for public performances, at which it might be made effective.

Mr. Courvoisier is to be congratulated upon the selection of his text and the able manner in which he has set it to music. The three short poems tell in a graphic manner the aspirations and success of a lowly lover for a high-born maid, and the music is appropriately ardent and vigorous in character.

The spirit of Shelley's suggestive lines has been cleverly caught and the song possesses great charm. Its compass is from a third below to the last upper space of the treble stave.

The Parish Choir Book. Nos. 211-216.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

RESUMING our notice of this rapidly-growing publication, we have first to mention No. 211, "Jesus Christ is risen to-day," by W. T. Best, being a new setting of the familiar hymn. It is purely hymnlike in character, and, while appropriately bold and cheerful, differs from the familiar tune, the voice parts being more solid and dignified, though some variety is afforded by changes of harmony in each verse. The next two numbers are settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, by Hamilton Clarke and the Rev. T. W. Stephenson respectively. The first, in C, is chiefly in 3-2 measure, is full throughout, and generally placid in character, though not monotonous. The Gloria in excelsis is the most vigorous portion of the Service. The other is slightly more pretentious, being mainly in five vocal parts (two trebles), but certainly not too difficult for ordinary use. It is bold in style and, though not penned by a professional musician, is musically in every respect. No. 214 consists of five Kyries by Oliver King. They are all marked by combined simplicity and expressiveness, the most effective being certainly the last in G minor, ending on the dominant. No. 215 is a chant setting of the evening Canticles skilfully harmonised on the sixth Gregorian Tone, by Dr. C. Warwick Jordan, and No. 216, a re-issue of a Benedictus arranged by Sir John Stainer on the third Gregorian Tone. Here we must pause for the present.

Twelve Humorous Songs. Written and composed by Mostyn T. Pigott. [Ascherberg and Co.]

THIS very amusing album consists of a series of parodies of various well-known types of song popular at the present day. Each has a satirical description of the essential features of the type, intended to be read by the singer, and stinging enough to set the emptiest heads a-thinking. Mr. Pigott's words are excellent fooling; and though his music is scarcely on the same level as regards humour, both are marked invariably by a degree of refinement that is as welcome as it is rare in compositions of this class. Among the best parodies in the book are "The Land of Placardy," "The Wet-Blanket Drawing-Room Song," "The Way of the World"—which begins "Down in a little bright tin box, there lay a small Sardine"—and "'Arriet's Answer."

Novello's Part-Song Book. Nos. 727-731.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE first of these has the unprepossessing title of "The Hag." It is a setting of lines by Herrick, the composer being B. Luard Selby, and is intended for the Wakefield Music Competition of the present year. It is a wild but very musically piece in B minor, and might have been penned by Mendelssohn when the master was in the mood that prompted his "First Walpurgis Night." Very different is No. 728, "Stay, sweet day," by George Garrett. This is a fairly bright and certainly effective part-song, suitable for performance without accompaniment. No. 729 is yet another setting of Shakespeare's "Who is Sylvia," by Edward German. It bears no resemblance whatever to Schubert's lovely song, but it is full of quiet expression and even originality—in fact, a very charming piece. No. 730, "The Shepherd's Waking," by Eaton Fanning, is an appropriate setting of words from John Attey's "First Book of Airs," 1622, being more in the style of a madrigal than a part-song. The last is a setting of Herrick's "Cherry Ripe," by S. P. Waddington. It is a madrigal in six parts, and, like the best compositions of Pearsall, has an antiquarian flavour with a tincture of modern feeling. All these, with the exception of the first, would sound better without than with accompaniment.

Novello's Octavo Edition of Trios, &c., for Female Voices. Nos. 304-307. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE first of these is Walter Macfarren's "You stole my love," too familiar to need words of description, and here skilfully arranged for soprano and contralto voices in four parts. No. 305, "Moonlight," by Hamilton Clarke, is a vocal waltz in three parts, with ad lib. accompaniments for castanets, triangle, and tambourine. It is very graceful and pretty, and conductors of young ladies' singing classes may be recommended to give it a trial. No. 306, "The Snow," by Edward Elgar, has obligato parts for two violins, and is a composition of a high class. It is for the most part sad in character, the key being E minor, but it ends more cheerfully in the tonic major. No. 307, "Fly, singing bird," by the same composer, has similar accompaniments but brighter in style. It is delightfully fresh and piquant, and the pianissimo close is very charming.

FOREIGN NOTES.

AGRAM.—The newly-erected National Theatre in the capital of Croatia is to be opened on the 15th inst., in the presence of the Emperor of Austria, with a new patriotic opera "Zriny," by M. Zajc.

ALTENBURG.—The Duke of Saxe-Altenburg has appointed the Baron von Kagenack to the post of Intendant at the Hof-Theater. Like his predecessor, Freiherr von Seckendorff, the new Intendant is a colonel à la suite in the Prussian army.

AMSTERDAM.—The Netherlandish Opera re-opened its doors last month with the first performance here of "Hansel and Gretel." Humperdinck's charming fairy opera, which had been carefully rehearsed, under the direction of M. de la Fuente, and well staged, achieved, as elsewhere, an enormous success. Performances of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger" are to be given here at the Opera House in the coming winter, by the Wagner Society, under the direction of its zealous, and somewhat daring conductor, M. Henri Viotta.

ANTWERP.—The performances of opera at the Royal Theatre were announced to be resumed on the 20th ult. Amongst novelties to be brought out during the season are signalled "Alvas," by M. Paul Gilson, and two operas by M. Jan Blockx, entitled respectively "Saint Nicholas" and "Rita."—M. Peter Benoit, the Principal of the Royal Conservatoire, who is just recovering from a short illness, has been for some time past engaged upon the score of a fairy opera, "Princess Sunbeam," the book of which has been furnished him by M. Paul de Mont.

BERGAMO.—Wagner's "Lohengrin," with Tito Scipione Terzi, formerly of La Scala, as the Knight of the Swan, met with a most enthusiastic reception, on its recent first performance in this town, at the Teatro Ricordi.

BERLIN.—Signor Sonzogno opened a season of Italian opera, on the 14th ult., at the Theater Unter den Linden, with the performance of Samara's "La Martire," which was well received; Signora Lison Frandin, as the ill-starred heroine, being greatly applauded, especially in her acting of the tragic part. Other works, all of them by "young Italy" composers, to be produced in the course of the season, are Mascagni's "Silvano" and "Zanetto," Corneo's "Claudio," Cippolini's "Il piccolo Haydn," Paër's "Il Maestro di Capella," and Boci's "Cristo al Festa di Purim," nearly all of them in one act.—An excellent performance of "Die Meistersinger" took place last month at the Royal Opera, under the direction of Herr Weingartner, with Fräulein Hiedler as Eva, Herr Gudehus in the part of Walther, and the veteran Herr Betz in that of the shoemaker poet.—In connection with the consecration and dedication of the new Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church, a musical performance took place in the sacred edifice, on the evening of the 1st ult., by the Schnöpsche Gesang-Verein, with the co-operation of the organist, Dr. Reimann, who skilfully performed on the magnificent new organ, the work of Messrs. Sauer, of Frankfurt-on-Oder.—The 100th performance of Herr Ignaz Brüll's opera "Das goldne Kreuz" was recorded at the Royal Opera last month, Herr Schmidt singing his original part of Nicolas on this occasion likewise for the hundredth time. The opera was first produced here in December, 1875, and retains its popularity throughout the Fatherland.—A new three-act grand opera, "Ingo," by Herr Philipp Rüfer, the libretto based upon a novel by the late Gustav Freytag, is the first novelty to be produced at the Royal Opera after re-installation in its newly-restored quarters.—Dr. Joachim has received from the German Emperor the title of Director of the Royal Hochschule für Musik.—Frau Mathilde Mallinger, the eminent dramatic singer, who has been for some time engaged in teaching at the Prague Conservatorium, has accepted a professorship at the Eichelberg Conservatorium in this capital.

BLOEMFONTEIN (SOUTH AFRICA).—The Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Ivan Haarburger, is making steady progress both in the efficiency of its members and in the favour of the public. At a recent Concert of the Society, when pieces by Mozart and Mendelssohn were included in the programme, Mdle. Antoinette Trebelli, the pianist, Tryal Bevan, and the clarinet virtuoso, August Grader, took part, and met with enthusiastic appreciation, more especially the lady vocalist.

BREMEN.—W. Kienzl's opera "Der Evangelimann," successfully brought out at the Berlin Opera some months since, will shortly be produced here, the work having also been accepted for performance by the majority of other German lyrical theatres, notably at Cologne, Mannheim, Munich, Cassel, and Strassburg. The composer is just now engaged upon a new operatic work, entitled "Don Quixote."

BRESCIA.—The Sentinella Bresciana publishes an interview with Mascagni, according to which the young Maestro is engaged upon the scores of a "Nero," with a libretto founded upon Pietro Cossa's drama, and of a "Midsummer Night's Dream," in which latter he intends to "combine the comic with the sentimental elements."

BRUSSELS.—The Théâtre de la Monnaie re-opened its doors on the 5th ult. with a performance of Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine." Massenet's "Thaïs," Xavier Leroux's "Evangéline," and an opera, "Ferval," by Vincent d'Indy, are amongst the new works to be first brought out here. Beethoven's "Fidelio," with M. Gevaert's recitatives, is in course of being remounted.

BUDAPEST.—Herr Franz Kaldy has been appointed the successor of Herr Nikisch in the capellmeisterhip of the Hungarian National Theatre. Count Andreas Festetics is the new director of the Institution.

COBURG.—Marschner's "Hans Heiling" opened the performances of the Hof-Theater on the 8th ult., after the vacation, during the greater part of which the personnel had been performing in London. A new operatic work, entitled "Ludwig der Springer," by Dr. Sandberger, of Munich, is in process of being mounted.

COLOGNE.—Herr W. H. Dayas, the excellent pianist and esteemed composer, hitherto residing at Wiesbaden, has accepted a professorship of his instrument at the Conservatorium here.—At a recent Gürzenich Concert a highly favourable impression was produced by the performance of some compositions by the American composer, Mr. Frank van der Stucken, notably of a "Festival Procession," for orchestra and organ, with final chorus (the latter sung by the Cologne Männergesang-Verein), exhibiting a considerable gift of melodious and effective writing.

DRESDEN.—The opera "Der Ueberfall," by Herr Heinrich Zöllner, the sister work to the same composer's "Bei Sedan," was given at the Royal Theatre for the first time last month, under the direction of Herr Schuch, when it met with a very favourable reception. The libretto is founded upon a novel, "Die Danaide," by the well-known poet, Herr Wildenbruch.—Mr. Eugene d'Albert, whose opera "Ghismonda" is in course of being mounted here, is engaged upon a new operatic work entitled "Gernot."—Herr Waldemar von Bausnern, the musical director of the Dresdener Liedertafel, has been appointed to the conductorship of the Bach-Verein in this town.—M. Willem Kes is reported rather seriously ill at Loschwitz, near this capital, where he is staying on a visit, and has been unable to conduct his last Concert of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, previous to taking up his residence in Glasgow.

EISENHART.—Kaiser Wilhelm has subscribed one thousand marks to the fund for the acquisition of the "Wagner Museum" of Herr Oesterlein, now in the keeping of this town. The total sum subscribed, some 91,000 marks, leaves a small balance over and above the purchase price.

FRANKFURT-ON-MAIN.—Herr Humperdinck has nearly completed the score of the music to a play by Ernst Rosmer, "Die Königskinder," which is to be brought out at the Munich Royal Theatre next Christmas. There will be vocal numbers for two parts only in the piece, which will, besides, contain incidental music, while each of the three acts will be preceded by a symphonic prelude.

HAMBURG.—Frau Klafsky, the dramatic prima donna of the Stadt-Theater, well known also to London opera-goers, has broken her contract with director Pollini and has joined Mr. Walter Damrosch's German Opera Company in New York, drawn thence, it is presumed, by "metal more attractive."

HELSINGFORS.—A series of performances of Wagner's "Lohengrin" is to be given during the coming winter, under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society here, and under the able and zealous direction of Herr Kajanus. Wagner's chef d'œuvre will then be heard here for the first time, and a highly promising young tenor, Herr Gröbke, a pupil of Professor Schroeder, of Sondershausen, will make his début in the titular part on the occasion.

KIEL.—A monument is to be erected in the wood at Düsterbrook, facing the shores of the Baltic Sea, to Carl Loewe, the famous composer of "Balladen," and of some remarkable oratorios which will yet meet with a revival. The unveiling of the monument is planned for November 30 next year, when a hundred years will have elapsed since the death of the composer at Kiel.

LEIPZIG.—Herr Heinrich Zöllner's opera "Bei Sedan," brought out on the 1st ult. at the Stadt-Theater, met with a most enthusiastic reception, due quite as much to his charming and masterly orchestrated score and picturesque scenic effects, as to the patriotic sentiment pervading it. The libretto is, curiously enough under the circumstances, founded upon a tragic episode in Zola's "La Débâcle," and includes an excellent scene of military camp life. The composer, who is his own librettist, is a son of Carl Zöllner, the well-known composer of male quartets, and has been for some years past the conductor of the New York German Liederkränz. —Herr Arthur Nikisch enters upon his new functions as conductor of the Gewandhaus Concerts on the 10th inst. On the 19th he will conduct the first Philharmonic Concert of the season at Berlin. The latter series promises to be one of exceptional interest, Herr Nikisch having been able to arrange for the co-operation of Johannes Brahms, Sarasate, Leopold Auer, Eugene d'Albert, Jean Gérardy, and other distinguished artists.

LIÈGE.—A highly-gifted pupil of the Liège Conservatoire, Signor Ipolito Ragghianti, who had obtained the first prize for composition, and who recently died, at the age of twenty-seven, at Nice, has left the nearly-finished score of an opera in one act, "Jean Marie," founded upon André Theuriet's drama, in which Sarah Bernhardt appeared with so much success. The score, which was found to be of considerable merit, has been completed, chiefly in its orchestration, by M. Paul Gilson, and the work will shortly be brought out at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, in Brussels.

MADRID.—A new opera, entitled "Se hierra en frío," by Señor Tomaso Breton, the libretto by Señor Ricardo de la Vega, is in course of preparation at the Apollo Theatre in this capital. —At the Teatro Principe Alfonso a successful first performance has recently taken place of a drama, "El Testarudo," written by Señores Perrin and Palacios upon the lines of a novel by Jules Verne, "Kéraban le Têtu," with music from the joint pens of Señores Brull and Estelles. —Señor Echegaray, the gifted and fertile author, has written his first operatic libretto, entitled "La Gitanella," to which Señor Chapi has composed the music.

MAINZ.—Herr Hans Pfitzner, the composer of the opera "Der arme Heinrich," successfully produced here last season, has completed a new score upon an operatic version of Ibsen's early romantic drama "The Feast of Solhag," a work which has nothing in common with the Norwegian author's later dramas, upon which no librettist, however daring, has as yet ventured. Herr Pfitzner's opera will be brought out ere long at the Stadt-Theater.

MEININGEN.—A Musical Festival was announced to take place here from the 27th to the 29th ult., devoted entirely to the works of Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms—the famous three B's, as the late Hans von Bülow was wont to style them. The programme included Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion, Cantata, No. 50 (for double-choir), and Concerto for strings; Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat major, Quartet in C sharp minor, and "Missa Solemnis"; and Brahms's "Triumphlied." The Dr. Joachim Quartet Party and Mr. Eugene d'Albert, as solo pianist, took part in the performances; the conductor was Herr Fritz Steinbach.

MEXICO.—The tenor, Herr Schott, who will be remembered by English opera-goers of some two decades since as a successful Wagner interpreter, is just now giving a series of Concerts here and in different parts of the provinces, without, however, attracting very great attention.

MILAN.—According to Italian journals Signor Boito has been prevailed upon, at the instance of Verdi, to hand over the score of his "Nerone" to Messrs. Ricordi, and the new work is to be first produced at the Pergola Theatre here. The composer's reluctance is explained by his being reported to have said: "I am too old to risk undergoing a similar experience with 'Nerone' as I did with its predecessor"—an allusion to the complete fiasco his "Mefistofele" met with on its first representation in Italy.

—Signor Sonzogno has acquired the rights of performance of a new opera, entitled "André Chénier," the libretto by Signor Illica, the music by Signor Giordano, which he will bring out at La Scala during next carnival season.

MONTEROTONDO.—A private performance was given here last month, by Signora Gemma Bellincioni, at her picturesque Villa Bianca, of a three-act opera, "La Sorella di Mark," the libretto of which has been suggested by the famous cantatrice to the poet Goliciani, and the music wedded thereto by Signor Giacomo Setaccioli. The new work is said to have proved highly effective, and its production in public, with Signora Bellincioni in the principal part, is shortly to be expected.

MUNICH.—Herr Eugen Gura, the esteemed baritone of the Royal Opera, whose contract with that Institution has expired, has entered upon a fresh agreement with the management, in accordance with which the artist will appear twelve times each season for the next three years in his favourite characters. —A new opera, "Enoch Arden," by a young composer, Herr Victor Hansmann, has been accepted for performance here. —A new journal, Die Mandoline, devoted entirely to that popularly revived instrument, has just been started, the editor being Herr Joseph Huslwanter, a manufacturer of zithers. The accompaniment to the famous serenade in "Don Giovanni" is written for the mandoline, but for many years, until recently, it has been almost invariably rendered by the violin fizzicato.

MÜRZSCHLAG (STYRIA).—A memorial tablet to Victor von Scheffel, the poet of "Der Trompeter von Sakkingen" and of many lyrics set to music, was unveiled here last month. The tablet, of black marble, is a portrait medallion in relief of the poet, who in 1873 stayed in this place for some time and commemorated his visit in some happy verses.

OPORTO.—Senhor José Vianna da Motta, the well-known pianist, is giving a series of chamber concerts here in conjunction with the violinist, Senhor Moreira de Sá.

RHEIMS.—M. Henri Marteau, the distinguished violin virtuoso, has just returned to this, his native town, for a period of rest, after an extensive concert tour, comprising over seventy concerts in the Scandinavian countries and Finland.

ST. PETERSBURG.—The repertory of the Imperial Opera during the approaching season will comprise no less than thirty operatic works by native composers, including three novelties—viz., "Raphael," by M. Arensky; "Nuit de Noël," by M. Rimsky-Korsakoff; and "Orenstela," by M. Tanaïeff.

STRASSBURG.—A Beethoven Festival was held here, on the 4th and 5th ult., under the conductorship of Herr Felix Mottl, on which occasion, in addition to others of the master's works, the Ninth Symphony was performed, the Festival concluding with a performance of "Fidelio" at the Municipal Theatre.

STUTTGART.—A monument is to be erected at Wasserburg, where he died in 1856, to P. von Lindpaintner, the once highly-popular composer, and Capellmeister of the Stuttgart Opera.

TURIN.—The Teatro Regio will commence its new season with a performance of "Die Götterdämmerung," shortly after which a complete representation of the "Nibelungen" Tetralogy is to be given here, for the first time in Italy.

VARESE.—Signor Tamagno is having a small opera house built for himself in the grounds of his residence here. The artist has commissioned Signor Gnaga to compose an opera expressly for the inauguration of this building, early next year, with a series of performances, some before invited guests, others given for the benefit of the poor of the district.

VENICE.—One of the workmen engaged at the arsenal in this town, Coccòlo by name, has written an opera. The public, always on the alert for a possible new Mascagni, have started a subscription for the purpose of the performance of the work, the title of which has not transpired.

VIENNA.—Herr Carl Goldmark's new opera, "Das Heimchen an Herde," a dramatised version of Dickens's

"Cricket on the Hearth," from the pen of Herr M. A. Willner, is to be one of the first novelties to be produced at the Imperial Opera. Another new work here will be Herr Albert Kauder's "Walther von der Vogelweide," which has already scored a success at the German Theatre in Prague. —At the Theater An der Wien, last month, a five-act operetta, entitled "Y. Z.," to which Herr Theodor Taube has furnished the libretto, achieved a conspicuous success. The composer is Herr Franz Wagner, one of the very few younger Viennese composers who bid fair to worthily succeed the late Genée and Franz Suppé. A so-called "Butterfly Walzer" in the piece is likely to become the rage of this dance-loving capital. —Miss Edith Walker, the young American contralto, who made so successful a début at Berlin last season, has entered upon a definite engagement at the Imperial Opera. —Dr. Hanslick, the eminent musical author and critic, celebrated, on the 11th ult., his seventieth birthday.

WEIMAR.—Xaver Scharwenka's new opera, "Matawintha," is to be shortly brought out, for the first time on any stage, at the Hof-Theater, the composer being expected here next month for the purpose of superintending the rehearsals. Herr Scharwenka has been, for some years past, residing in New York as director of the Conservatorium bearing his name. —Herr Krzyanowski, lately of Prague, has been appointed to the second capellmeistership at the Hof-Theater; his wife, the well-known dramatic singer, Madame Doxat, of the Leipzig Stadt-Theater, having likewise been engaged here.

WIESBADEN.—The senior professorship for pianoforte at the Conservatorium, lately vacated by Herr W. H. Dayas, has been conferred upon Herr Rudolph Niemann, a pianist widely known by his extensive concert tours in association with Professor August Wilhelmj.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WE are on the eve of a busy musical season, and an unusual activity has been displayed by our Concert-giving bodies in making their schemes more attractive than they have ever been before, by the introduction of a fair amount of novelties, and of eminent artists who are to make their début before local audiences.

I have already referred in my last letter to the works to be given by the Festival Choral Society, but I regret to say that at the last moment they have withdrawn Dr. Parry's "Lotos Eaters" from performance, at least for this season.

Messrs. Harrison's four Popular Subscription Concerts have for this season again been framed on a scale of the highest magnitude. Madame Patti is once more the prima donna at the first Concert, which will take place in our Town Hall on the 7th inst.

The Midland Institute is gradually enlarging the musical department in connection with the School of Music. The latest addition has been effected by the amalgamation of the Birmingham Amateur Opera Society with the Institute. The gradual growth of large music schools in the principal provincial cities, where every branch of music is represented, is sorely telling upon local individual professors, who find their vocation gone. There are naturally two sides to this question, which I shall not endeavour to solve. The local school of music is, however, not governed by professional musicians, but by amateurs.

The Birmingham branch of the Amalgamated Musicians' Union gave an Orchestral Concert in the Town Hall on Saturday, the 14th ult., for the purpose of establishing a Benevolent Fund. Saturday evenings during the musical season are, as a rule, devoted to popular Concerts for the people, at the uniform charge of admission of 1s., 6d., and 3d. The use of the Town Hall is granted at a nominal fee, in order to encourage music among the artisan classes. The orchestra on this occasion was principally composed of members of Mr. Stockley's band, and Mr. Stockley occupied the post of conductor. The programme was naturally of a popular character, and included, besides some Overtures, a selection from Gounod's "Faust," Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, and the ever welcome three Dances from "Henry VIII.," by Edward German. A strong effort was made to encore the Dances, but the programme being so lengthy the conductor did not accede to the demand. The vocal contributions also deserve honourable mention, and the palm must be awarded to Mr. Samuel Evans, a Welsh tenor, who possesses a well-trained voice and an excellent artistic style. Miss Nellie Pritchard, one of our foremost local contraltos, again enlisted the sympathy of her hearers by her sympathetic voice and phrasing. Songs were also rendered in a pleasing manner by Mr. G. H. Cutmere, a bass, who holds the post of principal bass singer at the English church at Nice. Two well executed violin solos were also given by Mr. Fred. Ward, a thorough and competent artist. The accompanist was Mr. W. Timperley.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

IT seems strange that in so musical a city as Bristol three months should elapse without any Concerts of a substantial nature taking place. Such has been the case nevertheless, for the very few events that have occurred have been unimportant from the point of view of the advancement of art. Some gratifying features, however, may be recorded as a kind of set-off against this musical dearth in our midst. First, the famous Orpheus Glee Society received a Royal command to sing before the Queen at Windsor a few weeks ago; but owing to Court plans being altered unexpectedly the visit to the Royal borough has been postponed for the present. Secondly, so high was the degree of satisfaction afforded by Bristol singers at the Gloucester Musical Festival three years ago, that a larger contingent, forming nearly half the choir, were engaged to take part in the 172nd celebration of The Three Choirs during the second week of last month. Once more their performances have given satisfaction, and it is probable that Bristol may be asked to furnish a contingent for the meetings at Worcester and Hereford. Musical prospects in our city are excellent, particularly on the part of the Musical Festival Society (the triennial meeting of which takes place next year) and the Choral Society. The works chosen, or being considered, by the committee of each body, could scarcely be better, and it is hoped that the starvation amateurs have recently undergone may lead them to partake bountifully of the liberal fare to be provided for them in the near future. The greatest blot on our musical escutcheon is the lapse of the regular Orchestral Concerts owing to insufficient support. Surely the many hundreds of young people who are educated at our numerous establishments and who year after year pass the examinations of the Royal Academy, Royal College, and other Institutions, should now form sufficient clientèle to maintain so admirable a series of orchestral performances as those conducted by Mr. Riseley, without detriment to any other society. Up to the time of writing, however, the question of resuscitating the Concerts has not been mooted.

MUSIC IN DUNDEE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Concert lists already issued promise another active season here. The Dundee Amateur Choral Union will give two Concerts as usual. At the first, on December 18, Costa's "Naaman" will be performed, with the following principals: Miss Amy Sargent, Mrs. Katherine Fisk, and Messrs. Hedmond and Bispham. Messrs. Paterson have organised the sixth series of the Dundee Subscription Orchestral Concerts, and the re-appearance of the Scottish Orchestra, under its new conductor, Herr Willem Kes, will be very welcome. They also announce two Pianoforte Recitals—one by M. de Greef on the 8th inst. and another by Herr Stavenhagen on February 24, 1896—and two miscellaneous Concerts at which Madame Albani and other popular artists will appear.

The fourth series of the Harrison-Simpson Subscription Concerts will bring a number of fine artists. Mr. George Crossmith will give a Recital, on November 13, and there will also be quite a host of smaller Concerts of local interest, both orchestral and chamber. The Incorporated Society of Musicians, which has been largely augmented, promises a series of Concerts and Lectures; and four Lectures on Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, and Wagner will also be given by Mr. S. Fraser Harris. The first Pianoforte Recital of the season was held, on the 13th ult., by Mr. J. T. Pye, assisted by Mr. H. E. Loseby (violin).

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Concert organised by the committee of ladies who manage the Norwich Lying-in Charity, in aid of the funds of that Institution, came off in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 3rd ult. Local amateur and professional assistance was given by Miss Beatrice Green, Miss Evelyn Ray, Rev. A. E. Black, Mr. J. H. Brockbank, and Master Percy Green (violinist), while Madame Alice Gomez and Miss Isabel Hirschfeld came from town. With such an array of talent the organisers had no difficulty in presenting a well-executed programme before the large and sympathetic audience assembled. In addition to filling the arduous post of accompanist, Dr. Bunnett played several organ solos with his accustomed ability.

A high class Pianoforte and Violin Recital was given in the Town Hall, Aylsham, on the 10th ult., the performers being Mr. Kingston Rudd and Mr. Arthur Bent. So unusual a circumstance brought together a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Rudd gave a fine rendering of Liszt's "Le Carnaval de Peth" and also three excerpts from Chopin, while Mr. Bent was equally satisfactory with Wieniawski's grand Polonaise in A. In conjunction these gentlemen played Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, much to the delight of those assembled. The singing of Miss Beatrice Semmence made a pleasing variety.

Mr. Kingston Rudd and Mr. Arthur Bent gave a Pianoforte and Violin Recital in the Assembly Room, Swaffham, on the 13th ult., which deserved a larger audience; but the musical taste of the residents in West Norfolk appears hardly sufficiently educated at present to digest so rich a programme as that put before them, comprising as it did works by Liszt, Chopin, Wieniawski, and Beethoven. A very capable performance of the latter master's "Kreutzer" Sonata was warmly applauded. Miss Beatrice Semmence sang several songs in good style.

On the evening of the 20th ult. Messrs. Howlett's Autumnal Concert was given in St. Andrew's Hall, before a large audience. The artists engaged included the Meister Glee Singers, Miss Mary Harris, Madame Alice Gomez, and Mr. John Saunders (violin). The audience were most enthusiastic and encores were the order of the evening.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

THE programme for next session, which promises to be as busy as any of its predecessors, includes only two novelties of very outstanding importance. The first, in virtue of its pervading influence, is the appointment of M. Kes to conduct the Concerts given by the Scottish Orchestra under Messrs. Paterson and Sons' ninth annual scheme of Orchestral and Choral Concerts; the second is the appearance in Scotland of Herr Rosenthal at a Recital arranged by Messrs. Methven and Simpson.

Messrs. Paterson and Sons are happy in their Concert management—Mr. J. C. Dibdin is facile princeps in Scotland—and the programme just published is replete with interesting features. "Old friends" are by no means neglected, while "new faces" in goodly proportion are as attractive in promise as they are sure to be welcome in performance. The Edinburgh Choral Union and Mr. Kirkhope's Choir have promised their assistance in the scheme, and we shall have the pleasure of witnessing the production of a new choral work ("The Death of Cuthullin") by our promising young countryman, W. Augustus Barratt, and of hearing Mr. Andrew Black again in his wonderful reading of the stern Prophet in "Elijah."

Messrs. Paterson also announce numerous single Concerts and Recitals, at which Sarasate, Madame Marx-Goldschmidt, Madame Albani, Herr Johannes Wolff (after too long an absence), and many others will be enthusiastically greeted by many warm admirers. Their season opens on the 10th inst. with a Recital by M. de Greef (his first appearance in Scotland); and to give the place of honour to the most honourable, Dr. Richter will conduct an Orchestral Concert on the 23rd inst.

The Harrison Concerts, under the local supervision of Messrs. Methven and Simpson, offer the usual four opportunities of hearing popular and other music rendered by the most distinguished artists.

Messrs. Wood and Co. announce the annual Recital, by Sir Charles and Lady Hallé, on November 16.

Besides sustaining the choral part in "Elijah" at Messrs. Paterson's eighth Concert, the Edinburgh Choral Union are to give the usual New Year's Day performance of "The Messiah," and a Concert, at which Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" will be contrasted with Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SUPPLEMENTING our last month's notice of the coming season's Choral and Orchestral Concerts, the sketch programmes have now been issued, and from these we gather that the following orchestral works will be heard here for the first time: Tschaiakowsky's "Overture Solenne," as also his Symphony (No. 4) in F minor; Moszkowski's Suite in F, Saint-Saëns's Symphony, No. 3 (with pianoforte and organ); Lalo's Overture "Le Roi d'Ys," Hartmann's "Nordische Heerfahrt," and Sinding's Symphony in D minor (Op. 21). I have already given a note of the choral works to be performed and it now only remains to be said that the Continental pitch will be adopted during the season. This alteration is undoubtedly interesting.

Dr. Richter's programme for Glasgow has been finally adjusted, and largely, it need hardly be said, on Wagnerian lines. It includes, almost as a matter of course, the "Tannhäuser" and "Flying Dutchman" Overtures, as also selections from "Die Götterdämmerung" and "Parsifal." We shall, moreover, have Tschaiakowsky's "Symphonie Pathétique" as a bonne bouche. The Concert has been fixed for the 24th inst., and Mr. Edward Lloyd will, amongst other selections, sing Siegmund's "Spring Song" from "Die Walküre." Tastes differ, of course, and hence it would be wrong to ignore the good work often accomplished under the auspices of more than one popular organisation in Glasgow. Thousands and thousands of people, for example, find their way to the Saturday Evening Concerts at the City Hall, where, on the 14th ult., the forty-second series was successfully inaugurated. More than once the Scottish Orchestra has discoursed classical music to our East-End friends, and with a success which was both agreeable and surprising. Mr. James Airlie should, therefore, be encouraged in his plucky efforts in this direction.

The smaller choral societies are putting their houses in order for the season. At the hour of writing these notes complete details are not to hand, but it is understood that the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society takes up Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and "The Messiah." The Greenock Choral Union is also to perform Handel's oratorio, and the "Creation" and "The Spectre's Bride" have a welcome place on the programmes of Mr. W. T. Hoock's popular Society. The Uddingston United Presbyterian Church Musical Association is studying Gade's "Christmas Eve," the Springburn Choral Association has fixed upon Smieton's "Jolly Beggars," Lyon Street Free Church Choir has placed "Samson" under rehearsal, and "The Messiah" will be performed during the season by the East Campbell Street United Presbyterian Church Choir, as also by the Dumbarton Choral Union. On the 16th ult. Mr. Wm. Nicholl, of the Royal Academy of Music, gave a Vocal Recital, preceded by a short Lecture on the singing voice; and on the same evening Dr. Peace gave his fifth Organ Recital of the Glasgow Cathedral series. The sustained popularity of these gatherings has, indeed, been something remarkable, and their resumption has been undoubtedly called for at the proper time. A series of Saturday Popular Concerts, at St. Andrew's Hall, was announced to commence on the 28th ult., and the veteran Mr. Sims Reeves was also announced to appear at the City Hall on the 26th ult.

Mr. James Gallie, of the Free Church Training College, has been appointed Music Master to the Pupil Teachers' Institute.

A new series of Organ Recitals in St. Andrew's Hall was inaugurated, on the 30th ult., by Mr. J. K. Strachan, the originator of the Saturday Afternoon Recitals in the West-End Hall. A number of well-known vocalists have been engaged, and, to enable the humblest lover of the art to attend, the prices have been fixed at 3d. and 6d.

A successful Convention, organised by the Glasgow branch of the Tonic Sol-fa College, was held on the 19th and 20th ult. Papers were read by Mr. D. S. Allan on "Tonic Sol-fa: a retrospect"; by Mr. James Buchanan, on "Some considerations on the present state of music"; by Mr. James Sneddon, on "Voice Production"; by Mr. W. H. Murray, on "Church music harmonies"; by the Rev. J. Robertson, on "Church Praise, as it is and as it might be"; by Mr. James Gallie, on "Method of Teaching"; by Mr. R. L. Reid, on "Taste, voice, and style in school singing"; and by Mr. W. G. McNaught, on "Music in Schools: the end in view and the means to attain it." Mr. John Boque's choir, Mr. D. S. Allan's choir, and the children under Mr. Gallie sang selections of part-songs with effect.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WITH the close of September has presumably come that of a season of dulness, which has been unprecedented within the memory of contemporary amateurs, for during the past six months or thereabouts there has been scarcely a note of music heard in this city or district. Of course we do not within such a category class the open air performances of bands good, bad, or indifferent—and generally of the latter character by the way—which take place in the parks and public places, the sweeping statement made being intended to apply to what should come under the head of concert notices.

In reference to the question of wind bands, something of a stir has been attempted by the recently formed local branch of the Society of Musicians. The latter, a sort of trades union, has attempted to dictate to the City Council what ought or ought not to be done by the police band, which holds the foremost position among such organisations in Liverpool, but the representations thus made have been ignored by the civic authorities. There seems, however, to be some reason for the objections urged by the professional men against the practice of allowing the police band to take engagements which would otherwise fall to ratepaying musicians who have to buy their own instruments and music, who have had to pay for their education, and who further actually contribute their quota to the support of the police force, the band of which body places itself in opposition to their livelihood. Further, it may be argued that if the policeman has time to practise privately, to attend rehearsals, and to perform in public when required, his lot can scarcely be as unhappy as depicted in Gilbertian rhyme, nor can he be overworked with the hours spent on beat.

A novelty in the form of Hebrew opera was produced at the Grand Opera House, which is the present style of the rehabilitated Coliseum Theatre, on the 26th ult. The company hailed from the United States, and the music of "King Saul and King David" is the composition of H. E. Singer, of New York. On the 2nd ult. another piece of the same kind, called "Sulamita, or the Daughter of Jerusalem," was given, the music being by the same writer. These quasi-sacred music-dramas have a good deal in common that is worthy of praise, but the whole seemed somewhat strange to those accustomed to nothing more Scriptural than that acknowledged failure of the lyric stage, Rossini's "Moses in Egypt." The two performances named seem to have been the only ones ventured upon in Liverpool.

For the 26th ult. was announced the opening of the Parr Hall, Warrington, by the local Musical Society, under Mr. F. H. Crossley. In the afternoon Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," and in the evening Sullivan's "On Shore and Sea" were respectively promised.

Various musical societies in this locality are getting into harness, but, owing to the particularly fine weather and other causes, definite programmes have in most cases not been yet forthcoming; with the beginning of the present month matters will have been put more into shape and the season gives promise of activity all round. This is a consummation much to be desired, especially as we shall sadly miss our accustomed lengthy series of performances by the Carl Rosa Opera Company.

Among the almost countless crowd of organists who have been, and are being laid under contribution for the weekly Recitals at St. George's, the names of Dr. C. J. Frost, Mr. H. L. Balfour, and Mr. B. Jackson claim attention. These metropolitan performers recently appeared and did ample justice to the fine instrument placed at their disposal. Local interest does not, however, appear to grow in this direction, and even during the régime of Mr. W. T. Best the audiences were frequently very meagre. The three players named above happily succeeded in attracting more than the average amount of attention.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE coming of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company to the Prince's Theatre marks the awakening of music among us after the long repose during the summer heat. The proposed length of its sojourn here has not yet been announced, but probably it may extend over six or more weeks. During the last visit of the company to this city it was made clear that a strong reinforcement was absolutely necessary, for the strain on the really capable members was too unremitting to be long sustained. The return of Madame Ella Russell—by far the best prima donna the Company has ever had—is most welcome. Miss de Lussan, too, has a certain popularity, and the alternation will be a relief to both and will serve to give a variety of attraction. It is a great pity that the management has not been able to secure some promising recruits of the sterner sex. What can our numerous colleges and academies and advertising "voice producers" be doing? Are there really no sweet-voiced young tenors and sonorous baritones attracted by the only too obvious openings on every side?

Sir Charles Hallé's visit to the Cape has retarded the issuing of his prospectus; and before his first Concert, at the close of the month, the orchestra of ninety performers of Dr. Richter will, on the 25th inst., awaken the echoes of the Free Trade Hall, with Mr. Edward Lloyd as the vocalist; and we trust that the audience may be so crowded as to induce an early return. Messrs. Harrison, in conjunction with Messrs. Hime and Addison, will give their first Concert in the same week; Madame Adelina Patti remaining constant to them, with Mdle. Nikita and a host of talent waiting to be heard during the subscription series.

On Saturday evenings the Free Trade Hall will again be musically occupied. Mr. Lane announces four Concerts, or Opera Recitals, with full costume and action, for which the Misses Macintyre, Ella Russell, De Lussan, and Alice Estey, with Mr. Hedmond, are engaged; and, with Sir Charles Hallé's permission, a large portion of his band will give popular programmes, under the direction of Mr. Speelman (who has engaged a goodly array of popular artists), on the other Saturday evenings during the winter. There will also be Mr. Cross's Concerts at the Young Men's Christian Association and Mr. Pyne's Organ Recitals at the Town Hall. So far, no one has announced his intention to essay rival performances at St. James's Hall; and past seasons have made it evident that the crowding of so many undertakings into the last evening of the week is as disastrous to the speculators as it is perplexing to the public.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

HARVEST Festivals are now occupying attention, and the choral singing is of a very high order. At the Bethesda Chapel, Hanley, on the 12th ult., the programme included

"The heavens are telling," "The marvellous work," and "Ye shall dwell in the land." Mr. J. Garner conducted and Mr. T. Johnson presided at the organ.

On the 14th and 16th ult. the Hanley Temperance Society held its second Choral and Instrumental Competition, in the Victoria Hall. On the first evening a Pianoforte Solo Competition drew thirteen entries from boys and girls under seventeen years of age. The test was the Allegro from Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 26), and each candidate played, in addition, a piece of the teacher's own selection. Mr. L. C. Venables was the judge. Miss Gertrude Marian Sanders (of Burslem) secured the first prize and Miss Esther Cornes the second. Miss Minnie Seabridge and Masters Hammond and Arden received commendation. Mr. Venables addressed the competitors and audience, giving some practical advice upon the performances of the evening. The Junior Choir Contest produced unusual interest among the audience. Mr. F. A. Challinor, of Longton, had prepared a two-part setting of the words of Tennyson's "Brook," and this formed the test for the evening. Eight choirs competed and some excellent singing was given. Mr. Venables again adjudicated and awarded Talke Wesleyan (Mr. Whewall) first prize, Talke Primitive (Mr. Handford) second, and Florence Boys' Choir third. If these junior competitions are to be continued the age limit should be rigidly enforced, thus bringing all choirs to the same age standard and making the contest a true test of ability.

Vocal music does not find a place in the evening class programmes issued by the various Board Schools. The friends of music should certainly secure official recognition for their favourite art. Thousands leave school yearly without the opportunity of continuing their musical studies.

The second evening's Competition at the Victoria Hall attracted a large and enthusiastic audience. The programme was a very lengthy one and future curtailment is absolutely necessary, as it was half-past eleven before the proceedings closed. In the violin class seven entries were received, and in the end, Miss K. Woolley, of Stoke, secured first place, and Miss E. M. Sanders obtained the second. Vieuxtemps's "Reverie" was the test. The Adult Male-Voice Quartet Competition produced seven entries to sing Macfarren's "Now the sun has mounted high." Hanley Male Glee Singers and the Longton Glee Union obtained the prizes. For the Adult Choir Contest, Sir George Macfarren's setting of Tennyson's "Break, break," was selected. The Congleton Choir, owing to the lengthy programme, had to leave before being heard, the last train starting for Congleton prior to the fifth choir having a hearing. The other choirs sang with exceptional taste and precision. The judge (Mr. Venables) once more expressed his pleasure and awarded Northwood (Mr. Joseph Kirk) the first prize of £7 7s. with forty-nine points, Upper Hanley Guild (Mr. H. Morrey) and Newcastle Ebenezer (Mr. S. Hughes) divided the second and third with forty-six points each. Mr. Hughes, the secretary of the Society, deserves thanks for the admirable arrangements made throughout the competitions.

The ballot for season tickets at the Meakin Popular Concerts has been restricted to residents of Hanley.

On the occasion of the ordination of the Rev. J. V. Rogerson, at Trinity Church, Hanley, the church choir sang anthems, and Miss Mackie and Mr. Sheldon rendered solos.

Mr. J. A. MacGregor, of Burslem, was elected a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland at the annual meeting held in the High School, Edinburgh, on the 21st ult. The degree of F.E.I.S. is only conferred "for distinguished service in the cause of education."

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

THE forthcoming musical season in Sheffield promises to be an exceedingly busy one. There is an abnormal number of preliminary announcements of choral and instrumental performances, Ballad Concerts and Pianoforte Recitals. It is to be hoped that this excess of enterprise may not result in any considerable monetary losses. The most interest attaches to the doings of the various influential choral societies of the city. The old-established Amateur Musical Society (Mr. Schöllhammer) announces for the Winter Concert Costa's "Eli." For the Spring Concert an interesting novelty will probably be introduced to Sheffield.

The Musical Union (Dr. Coward) announces Dr. Parry's "Job" and the "Creation." The committee of this enterprising society deserve every encouragement in their efforts to introduce new works. If Dr. Parry's work meets with adequate success it will no doubt be followed by the same composer's "King Saul."

The St. Cecilia Musical Society (Mr. W. Brown) will give during the season "The Messiah" and other works.

The Choral Union (Mr. Suckley) will give a Concert performance of Verdi's opera "Ernani."

Dr. Coward's new cantata "Heroes of Faith" and the same composer's "Story of Bethany" are announced by several local and district societies.

The amateur Instrumental Society proposes to give three Concerts during the season, the chief works being Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Raff's "Leonore" Symphonies and one of Liszt's Rhapsodies, while one Concert will be a "Wagner night."

Mr. Harrison announces his third series of Subscription Concerts. At the first of these Madame Patti will sing. Mr. Charles Harvey has issued an attractive list of Concerts, the chief of which are a Richter Concert (this month) and a Concert by Madame Albani and party. The city will be well served in the matter of Pianoforte Recitals, visits from Messrs. Paderewski, Slivinski, Frederick Dawson, Stavenhagen, W. Richter, and De Greef being already promised. A visit from Mr. Sims Reeves and party, and several performances of "The Messiah" at Christmas are likewise announced.

Efforts are being made in Sheffield to establish a musical Festival, and the amalgamation of several of the choral societies of the city and district has resulted in the announcement of a performance of "Elijah" on the 10th inst. All the expenses are guaranteed, so that no loss can accrue, and any profit will be handed over to medical charities. The principals engaged are Miss Medora Henson, Miss Edith Leslie, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. R. E. Miles. The post of conductor will be occupied in turn by the conductors of the societies taking part. Dr. Coward will fitly conduct this year.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MUSICAL matters here are still quiet; particulars, however, of the coming season are being announced. MM. Vidal and Marty have formed their orchestra, and are engaged by the Opéra to organise important Sunday Symphonic Concerts, dating from November 1. MM. Saint-Saëns, Massenet, and V. d'Indy will each direct a Concert devoted entirely to their own works.

M. Saint-Saëns has just completed "Frédégonde," and it is now in rehearsal.

The Opéra Comique opened its doors on the 1st ult., but only works from the old répertoire are being produced.

The Minister of Fine Arts has just ordered a bust of Malibran, which will be placed at the Opéra, and M. Frère, the sculptor, has also been commissioned to execute a bust of Carafa.

MM. Widor and Diémer have been appointed members of the International Jury at Berlin, which awards the prize founded by Rubinstein. This quinquennial competition will take place in Paris in 1905. Although the Amsterdam Exhibition is over, the public are still commenting upon the success obtained by the French instrument manufacturers. It is scarcely twelve years since that France imported from England the steel wires necessary for the manufacture of its pianofortes. The "Firminey" steel manufactories have improved matters in this respect. M. Lyon, the head of the Pleyel firm, is an old pupil of the "Ecole Polytechnique," and in consequence is able to carry out his work on scientific principles.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WHILE midsummer dulness still prevails this letter must needs be more prophetic of what is to come during the season which is approaching than descriptive of any past events. Only the first small stir of returning musical life has begun in New York, with the re-opening of the several conservatories and schools, which are said to be more crowded with pupils than is common at this time of the year. All indications point towards the coming musical season as one of the richest and most varied in its attractions which New York has ever witnessed.

The two events of importance which are nearest at hand are a pair of Wagnerian Festival Concerts, to be given in the Madison Square Garden, New York, and the annual Musical Festival of the choral society of Worcester, Massachusetts. The Madison Square Garden Concerts were to be given on two Sundays, September 22 and 29, and the vocalists announced to appear are Madame von Januschowsky, from the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, and Messrs. Fischer, Berthald, and Mertens, with Mr. Adolph Neuendorff as conductor. This gentleman has not held the bâton over a New York orchestra for a number of years, and his former popularity makes his return doubly welcome.

The thirty-eighth annual Festival of the Worcester County Musical Association, of Worcester, Mass., was to take place from September 23 to 27. Mr. Carl Zerrahn, of Boston, who has conducted the Society for many years, was to occupy his usual place, with Mr. Franz Kneisel as associate conductor. The solo singers announced are Madame Melba, Mrs. Elene B. Eaton, Mrs. Slabury C. Ford, and Miss Lillian Blauvelt, sopranos; Mrs. Carl Alves and Miss Carlotta Desvignes, contraltos; Messrs. William H. Rieger, J. C. Bartlett, A. G. Thies, and J. H. McKinley, tenors; Messrs. Carl E. Duft, William H. Kieth, and G. Campanari, baritones; and Mr. George R. Clark, solo bass. Nothing of any especial novelty in the way of choral compositions was to be produced, except a work entitled "Barbara Frietchie," which is from the pen of Mr. Jules Jordan, of Providence, Rhode Island, a well-known tenor singer of former years, and more latterly a successful teacher of the voice. It is believed that this is Mr. Jordan's first venture with a composition of any considerable size. Besides this, "Israel in Egypt," "St. Paul," Massenet's "Eve," and Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" were included in the programme of the Festival.

It is evident that although there will be no lack of distinguished pianists among us during the coming winter, violin players will claim the lion's share of the honours and the more substantial rewards of merit. Ondricek, the eminent Bohemian, will make his first American appearance at the first Concert of the Philharmonic Society, on November 15, playing Dr. Dvorák's A minor Concerto. The third Concert of the same Society, on January 10, will witness the return of M. Sauret, who will then be heard in the Mendelssohn Concerto and one written for him by Saint-Saëns. Mr. Rivarde, a young virtuoso, the son of one of New York's oldest and most successful vocal teachers, will be first heard at the Metropolitan Opera House on Sunday, November 24, in Concertos by Beethoven and Lalo; and Mr. Alexander Bull and Madame Camilla Urso (who has just returned from an Australian and South African tour) will also appear during the season. Advices from Paris intimate that M. Massenet may visit America during the winter. It is now thought probable that he will cross the Atlantic on the same steamer which brings the brothers De Reszke.

Mr. Charles K. Johnson, President of the American Union of Swedish singers, has been in Chicago endeavouring to arrange the details of a great musical pilgrimage to the leading capitals of Europe. Some years ago a party representing the Arion Society of New York made a similar trip, but the present undertaking is planned on a much larger scale. It is proposed to take over a picked chorus of 300 Swedish singers, and it is said that negotiations are now pending for an ocean liner to carry them and their wives and the party of friends who will accompany them. Before leaving New York, a great singing Festival, lasting a week, will be held. The party will first go to Copenhagen, then to Gothenburg, Stockholm, and other cities.

Mr. Paderewski's season will open on the 30th inst., when, with Mr. Damrosch's orchestra, the pianist will play, for the first time in this country, his own Polish Fantasia. His first New York Recital will be given on November 2. After playing in Brooklyn and Philadelphia he will begin a Concert tour which will take him as far North as Portland, Maine; and as far South and West as Washington, and Cleveland, Ohio.

M. Marsick, who is among the invading army of violinists, will make his first appearance on November 1 and 2, at Carnegie Hall, at the first public Rehearsal and Concert of the Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Damrosch.

At date of writing one performance of Burnand and Sullivan's comic opera "The Chieftain" has been given, at Abbey's Theatre. Mr. Francis Wilson, who is behind this venture, and who assumes the principal rôle, has won great fame and large fortune as a comedian of an extremely farcical order, and nearly all the works which he has brought forward have been of a sort specially constructed to exhibit his particular talents. "The Chieftain" being of quite a different stamp (and a much more refined one), it is as yet rather early to make a prediction as to its success. It was well received by its first night audience, was well acted and mounted, and deserves to have a good run, if for no other reason than because its tendency is toward a distinctly higher plane than that of "The Oolah," "Wang," "The Merry Monarch," and a score or two of pieces of semi-musical horseplay which have done duty as "comic opera" for so many years in New York that the public taste has become decidedly vitiated. There is some danger that Mr. Wilson, having been so long identified with this kind of fooling, will not be appreciated in his praiseworthy effort to produce really meritorious light opera. It is to be hoped that having taken himself somewhat more seriously the public will take Mr. Wilson at his own valuation. He has gifts which are above the uses to which he has hitherto put them and it would be a pity to see them wasted.

The Rev. John Ireland Tucker, D.D., rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, Troy, N.Y., who died on August 17, was prominent in the annals of American church music. He assumed the rectorship at Troy (his first and only charge) on Christmas Day, 1844. He was from the start inclined to advanced customs, and was the first rector to introduce the habitual use of the choral service—though there had been instances of the performance of choral services on special occasions before that time. He was the first to adopt the singing of the Canticles and Psalter to Gregorian tones. He had some special facilities in his church at Troy for working out his musical ideas, and the service there came in time to have something of a reputation. In 1871 the Episcopal Church adopted its first standard hymnal, and Dr. Tucker published the first musical adaptation of that book. In that work he was largely aided by William H. Walter, Organist of Trinity Chapel, New York. Mr. Walter was a pupil of Edward Hodges, who became organist of Trinity Church in 1838, and the pupil had imbibed from the master a strong taste for the music of the English School of Psalmody. When the "Tucker" Hymnal was launched upon the market it came like a revelation to church musicians, and it is not too much to say that it completely revolutionised the hymn music of the Episcopal churches, which up to that time had followed pretty closely the lines mapped out by Lowell Mason, William B. Bradbury, and their confères. For this important work Dr. Tucker received the credit, though it is probable that without the aid and influence of Mr. Walter the book never would have been what it was, and would never have accomplished so much as it did. Though many musical settings of the Hymnal were published, "Tucker" remained the standard for years, only one other adaptation ever proving a formidable rival to it. When the present Hymnal (which has replaced the book of 1871) was put forth a year or two ago by the house of Bishops, Dr. Tucker published a setting of it, and by introducing a large number of tunes composed by organists resident here endeavoured to give it a distinctively American cast; but Mr. Walter had in the meantime died, and much material was allowed to find its way into the book which he would probably have suppressed had he been living, and the publication only met with a moderate degree of success. The services rendered by Dr. Tucker, in connection with his first Hymnal, were, however, undoubtedly very valuable to the cause of church music in America, and for them he deserves to be held in lasting remembrance.

THE fortieth season of the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts will commence on the 12th inst. The programmes of the first ten Concerts already issued indicate the same care in the selection of representative music which has so long distinguished Mr. Manns's directorship. Among the orchestral novelties we notice Two Characteristic Pieces by Mr. J. F. Barnett, a Symphony in D by Mr. Walford Davies (who is accorded the honour of being associated with the most distinguished native composers at the Concert on the 10th inst., in celebration of the fortieth anniversary of these Concerts), the New Suite by Mr. German written for the Leeds Festival, an Andante Religioso for organ, harp, violin, and orchestra, by Mr. C. Couldery, Tschaikowsky's Symphony (No. 4) in F minor, the Vorspiel to Mr. Eugene d'Albert's opera "Der Rubin," and two pieces on old Scottish melodies by Sir A. C. Mackenzie. For choral works we are promised the late Mr. Goring Thomas's "Swan and the Skylark" (produced at last year's Birmingham Festival), a chorus from Bach's Church cantata, "Gottlob nun geht das Jahr zu Ende," and Goetz's "Nœnia," a work which has been strangely neglected by choral societies; a Beethoven Concert in commemoration of the 125th anniversary of that composer's birth will conclude the ten Concerts before Christmas.

THE recently published fourteenth annual report of the "Mozarteum" at Salzburg contains some documentary evidence relative to the worldly possessions of the great master at the time of his death, which is not without its pathetic interest. From the inventory taken on December 19, 1791, at the residence, "Kleines Kaiserhaus, No. 470, in the Rauhensteingasse" (Vienna), it appears that there was found in ready money sixty florins, "wherewith the funeral and other expenses were paid." Then there were assets, consisting of articles of clothing, three silver spoons "and other domestic ware," a billiard table, a "Fortebiano (sic) mit Pedal," and a small library of books and music, besides some acknowledgments of debts to the deceased, valued in all at 592 florins. Against this sum there were debts amounting in the aggregate to 918 florins, according to the testimony of the widow, who thus had to find the sum of 326 florins and seven kreuzer before the ultimate settlement of affairs. All of which would be but sordid details were it not for their association with the earthly struggles of immortal genius.

A THREE DAYS' Musical Festival will be held at Munich, from the 19th to the 21st inst., under the direction of Herren Zumpe and Felix Mottl. On the first day Handel's "Messiah" will be given, with Robert Franz's additional accompaniments (conductor, Herr Zumpe). The second day's programme includes Weber's Overture to "Eury-anthe," Liszt's "Festklänge," "Verwandlungs Musik," and final scene (with chorus) from "Parsifal" (conductor, Herr Mottl). On the last day will be given, inter alia, Gluck's Overture to "Iphigenia in Aulis," Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture (No. 3), and the Ninth Symphony (conductor, Herr Zumpe). The following will be the solo executants: Mesdames Mathilde Haas, of Mayence; Johanna Nathan, of Frankfurt; Mathilde Weckerlin, of Munich; Messrs. Francesco d'Andrade, of Lisbon; Eugen Gura, of Munich; Robert Kaufmann, of Bâle; Anton Sistermans, of Frankfurt; Alfred Krasselt, of Munich; Frederick Lamond, of Glasgow; Franz Ondricek, of Vienna; and S. de Lange, of Stuttgart. The chorus will be constituted of various Choral Societies.

OUR readers may be reminded that the Leeds Triennial Festival will commence on the 2nd and terminate on the 5th inst. "The Messiah" will occupy the opening morning, and in the evening Dr. Hubert Parry's "Invocation to Music" and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" will be given. Thursday morning will be devoted chiefly to a Recital of Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," and the evening programme will include Parts 1 and 2 of Bach's "Christmas" Oratorio and Mr. Edward German's new Orchestral Suite. At this Concert Mr. Emil Sauer will play Chopin's Concerto in E minor. On Friday morning Dvůřák's "Stabat Mater" will be performed, together with Mr. Somervell's new cantata "The Forsaken German," and Mr. Sauer will again play. In the evening Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," Parts 1 and 2, will be given, with M. Massenet's new Symphonic Poem for orchestra, entitled "Visions," and Samuel Wesley's Psalm "In exitu Israel." The list of artists have already appeared in these columns. Sir Arthur Sullivan will, of course, be conductor-in-chief.

A SERIES of Subscription Performances will be given at the Hampstead Conservatoire during the autumn. On November 4 there will be a dramatic performance of Sophocles' "Antigone," with Mendelssohn's music, for full band and chorus. The English version to be used on this occasion is that by Professor Campbell. A special stage will be erected, and the scenery and costumes will be specially designed. The characters will be acted by Miss Olive Kennett, Mr. Ernest Meads, and other members of the Irving Dramatic Club; and the play will be produced under the direction of Mr. Charles Fry, the musical arrangements being in the hands of Mr. George F. Gaussen. It is intended to give a second performance, on November 6. On November 16 a Vocal Recital will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel; and on December 4 a Violin and Pianoforte Recital by Señor Sarasate and Madame Berthe Marx-Goldschmidt.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO. are publishing a new edition of Schubert's Masses—the Masses in F and B flat are already issued—in accordance with the decree concerning church music drawn up by the Sacred Congregation of Rites and approved of by the Pope. The decree requires that "Every piece in which words are to be found omitted, deprived of their meaning, or indiscreetly repeated, is forbidden," and "It is forbidden to break up into pieces completely detached the Versicles, which are necessarily inter-connected." The music has been altered as little as possible, but in no instance has the composer's harmony been interfered with. The editor is Mr. T. F. A. Gale, organist and director of the choir at St. Mary's, Clapham.

A NEAT little anecdote concerning Johannes Brahms is making the round of the German press. The Master, notwithstanding the somewhat austere character of many of his compositions, is a great admirer of the dance tunes of Johann Strauss. Calling at Strauss's house recently to offer his congratulations upon the marriage engagement of his daughter, the latter requested that he might commemorate his visit by a few lines in her Album. The celebrated composer, with singular amiability and tact, thereupon wrote down the first few bars of the famous walse "An der Schönen blauen Donau," to which he added the words: "Unfortunately not by Johannes Brahms."

THE twenty-fifth season of the Royal Choral Society will commence on Thursday evening, the 31st inst., with Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The series will comprise ten Concerts, and there will be the usual extra Concerts on New Year's Day and Good Friday. The works announced for performance are Dr. Hubert Parry's "Invocation" Ode in honour of Purcell (which will be performed on November 21 for the first time in London), with Parts 1 and 2 of the "Creation"; "The Golden Legend," "The Messiah" (twice), "Israel in Egypt," "Judas Maccabeus," "The Redemption," Berlioz's "Faust," and Mendelssohn's "St. Paul."

THE Scholarships, Exhibitions, and Medals at Trinity College have been awarded as follows: Pianoforte Scholarship, Maud Agnes Winter; Violin Scholarship, Claude S. Fenigstein (re-elected); Benedict Pianoforte Exhibition, Mabel Phillips (re-elected); Sims Reeves Vocal Exhibition, Bertha Ackworth; College Violin Exhibition, Lily J. P. Evans; College Violoncello Exhibition, Edith Jessy Evans (re-elected); College Organ Exhibition, John Byam Hicks; Turner Pianoforte Medal, Susanne S. Stokvis; Turner

Singing Medal, Elsa S. A. Odell; College Harmony Medal, Elizabeth Harvey; and College Counterpoint Medal, Alfred Brocklebank.

The municipality of Bournemouth is to be congratulated on the enterprise and public spirit shown by the prospectus of winter Concerts which has recently been issued to the music-lovers of that favourite resort. It is proposed to augment the existing string orchestra at the Winter Gardens to thirty-one performers and to give a series of high-class orchestral Concerts during the forthcoming winter season. The very modest subscription fee should induce a large number of visitors to support so praiseworthy an undertaking. Beethoven, Schumann, Mendelssohn—to name only these—are represented in the scheme by some of their most important works.

THE Gresham Lectures by Professor Bridge for this term are on the subjects of the String Quartet (two), Purcell's Operas, and Organ Music. These will be very fully illustrated. The complete Masque music for Purcell's opera "Dioclesian" (some of the most beautiful of his secular music) will be performed by soloists, chorus, and orchestra. This cannot fail to prove a great attraction, particularly just now, when we are on the eve of the Purcell Festival. The Lectures, we may remind our readers, are given in the great Hall of the City of London School, and are free to the public.

A BEAUTIFULLY constructed organ, destined, by Papal order, for St. Peter's Church, in Rome, is just now on view at the factory of Messrs. Walker and Co., organ builders, of Ludwigsburg. The instrument is constructed in such a way that, despite its weight of 7,500 kilos, it may be moved with the greatest ease, by a single person, from one part of the church to another. Amongst other special features it possesses two solo registers, or organs, supplied with an extra high pressure of wind, and which, in view of the gigantic proportions of the edifice for which they are intended, are expected to produce a most powerful effect.

THE Queen's Hall Choral Society will give a series of Oratorio Concerts during the season 1895-6, beginning on November 13 with "The Walpurgis Night," Beethoven's "Choral Fantasia," and Mendelssohn's "Athalia." "Samson," "The Hymn of Praise," "Acis and Galatea," "Messiah," and "Redemption" are included in the series. Many eminent soloists are already engaged, and Mr. Alberto Randegger will conduct.

GAUL'S "Ruth" was performed by the choir of St. Mary Woolnoth, Lombard Street, on Wednesday, the 18th ult., in continuation of the Harvest Festival held on the previous Sunday. The soloists were the Misses Quail, Judge, Nash, A. Molson, and Mr. Greir. Mr. H. R. Essex, organist of the church, conducted, and Mr. Smith from St. Philip's, Arlington Square, accompanied on the organ.

A SERIES of Orchestral Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Randegger, will be given at Queen's Hall every Sunday afternoon during the winter season, commencing on the 6th inst. and terminating on March 29. These will take the place of the Organ Recitals given last season, and the subscription for the whole series has been fixed at the extremely moderate price of one guinea.

THE South London Choral Association and Orchestral Society will give six Concerts during the season. The works to be performed will include Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," Arnett's "Ballad of Carmilhan," Dr. W. H. Hunt's comic opera "Utopia," "Israel in Egypt," and Spohr's Symphony in E flat. There will also be a Violin Recital, under the direction of Mr. T. E. Gatehouse.

THE Gravesend and Milton Choral Association announces its usual series of three Subscription Concerts, which will comprise a Chamber Concert with the Shinner Quartet, on the 21st inst., Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," and a Recital of Gounod's "Faust." There will also be an extra miscellaneous Concert with popular artists.

SIR AUGUSTUS HARRIS has engaged Madame Albani for the next season of Royal Opera at Covent Garden, when she will appear as the heroine in Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde." Madame Albani commences a provincial tour in the present month, and during January and February will tour through Canada and America.

MR. D'OYLY CARTE has arranged with Mr. W. S. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan to write a new opera for the Savoy Theatre, to be produced late in the autumn.

AN Orchestral Society is being formed at the Hampstead Conservatoire, under the direction of Mr. George F. Geaussen. The fact that there will be no subscription will no doubt ensure a large number of applications for membership.

THE Wimbledon Male-Voice Choir will rehearse, during the coming season, Gounod's Second "Messe des Orphéonistes," Grieg's "Landerkennung," "Antigone," and other smaller works. The conductor is Mr. H. W. Weston.

THE St. Peter's Choral Society, Brockley, will perform, during the season, "Elijah," Gounod's "Gallia," Schumann's "King's Son," and Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch."

WE are asked to state that there are some vacancies for proficient amateur instrumentalists in the Church Orchestral Society, particulars of which will be found in our advertisement columns.

MR. ERNEST MARRIOTT, of St. Paul's Cathedral, in conjunction with Mr. Arthur Wright, is starting a Glee and Madrigal Society at Haringay, and will commence rehearsals the second week in October.

AT St. James's Hall, the Misses Sutro will give a series of three Recitals of compositions for two pianofortes on the afternoons of the 23rd inst., November 6, and November 20.

THE Monday Popular Concerts (thirty-eighth season) will be resumed on November 4, and the Saturday Popular Concerts on November 9. They will continue—with the usual Christmas interval—until March 30.

SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S "The Golden Legend" will be performed in English by the Choral Society in Leyden, under the direction of M. van Iperen.

MESSRS. BOOSEY'S Ballad Concerts will be resumed at Queen's Hall on Wednesday evening, November 6, and the afternoon Concerts on November 16. The series will consist of twelve Concerts.

MR. PLUNKET GREENE and Mr. Leonard Borwick will give two Vocal and Pianoforte Recitals, at St. James's Hall, on the afternoons of November 1 and 8.

MESSRS. FELIX MOTT and Hermann Levi will conduct Wagner Concerts, at Queen's Hall, the one on November 12 and the other on November 26.

THE St. James's Hall Ballad Concerts will commence on November 20 (evening) and November 27 (afternoon). Thirteen Concerts will be given in all.

THE Musical Artists' Society, now entering upon its twenty-second season, will give its usual series of Chamber Concerts from March to June next year.

OBITUARY.

WE have to record the death, on the 1st ult., at his residence in Camden Road, of Mr. CHARLES KING HALL, the esteemed London organist and composer, aged fifty. He was the composer of a quantity of church music and a large number of songs and pianoforte pieces; but his most popular works were those which he contributed to the German Reed entertainments at St. George's Hall. Amongst these were the operettas entitled "Foster-brothers," "Doubleday's Will," and "A Tremendous Mystery," with words by Mr. F. C. Burnand; "The Artful Automaton," and "A Strange Host," of which Mr. Arthur Law was the librettist; "Grimstone Grange" and "A Christmas Stocking," the books of which were supplied by Mr. Gilbert & Becket; and "The Naturalist," composed to a libretto by Mr. Comyns Carr. Mr. Hall, in 1874, wrote a "School for the Harmonium," with a series of progressive studies for that instrument, and is also the author of the treatise on the Harmonium in "Novello's Music Primer" series. He was for some years organist of St. Paul's, Camden Square, then at St. Luke's, Osney Crescent, and finally at Christ Church, Brondesbury.

The death is announced, at Liège, of M. MARCOTTY, one of the most highly esteemed vocal professors in that town. The possessor of a fine and well-trained bass voice of exceptional range, M. Marcotty was for many years a most popular singer in Belgian concert-rooms, and also for a long period the bass soloist at the Cathedral. Of late years M. Marcotty confined himself exclusively to teaching, in which capacity he has formed some excellent pupils.

M. EMILE BOUCHÈRE, musical director of La Trinité, Paris, died in that capital on the 4th ult., at the early age of thirty-five. A brilliant pupil of the academy of M. Gustave Lefèvre, he soon made himself known by important sacred compositions, masses, motets, and others, and by a number of pieces of chamber music. He was also the composer of a "Marche Triomphale," performed at the Hôtel de Ville in 1886, in connection with the Chevreul Centenary Fêtes. Some three years since, M. Bouchère established a vocal academy in Paris, which proved very successful, and in conducting which he was assisted by his wife, formerly, as Mlle. Emile Ambre, a well known singer.

The death is announced, on August 26, at Hoorn (Netherlands), of Dr. J. J. AGHINA, a much-valued physician in that town. With an extensive medical practice, the deceased combined a considerable musical and literary activity. He was for many years an active member of the local orchestral society, "Sappho," and a contributor to the Musiekbode, and has published some able metrical translations, notably of Tegner's "Frithjof Saga."

MADAME DELVIL, formerly a most popular opera bouffe vocalist, known throughout Belgium and the Netherlands as "La Schneider Bruxelloise," died last month at Brussels. She made her début at the Park Theatre, in the Belgian capital, and first obtained popularity in M. Gevaert's operetta "Le Diable au Moulin." Later on, during a period of revival of the Offenbachian burlesque-operas, she became a universal favourite—and justly so—in the leading rôles of "La Belle Hélène," "La Grande Duchesse," and "La Vie Parisienne." She was the widow of the former director of the Park Theatre, and has long lived in retirement.

M. QUEYREL, a well-known operatic bass singer, died recently at the Hôpital de la Conception, at Marseilles. A pupil of the Paris Conservatoire, M. Queyrel, some fifteen years ago, made his début at the Gaité Theatre in that capital, in M. Duprat's opera "Petrarque." After successive engagements as leading basso in grand opera at Brussels, Lyons, Marseilles, and Bordeaux, the artist retired to his native town, where he died, a victim of consumption.

The death is announced, at Piacenza, of LUIGI CHESSE, musical composer and teacher, aged seventy-two. He first became favourably known by an operetta with spoken dialogue, entitled "La Nuova Pianella perduta nella neve," brought out in 1865 at the La Commenda Theatre, Milan, and which made the round of Italian stages. Chesse was less fortunate with his opera seria "La Contessa di Medina," first produced at his native Piacenza in 1867, and again, in 1873, at La Scala, Milan, where, however, it failed to please the audience.

We record the death, at Oakland, California, of STEPHEN W. LEACH, actor, singer, and composer, who was present at the first performance of "Elijah" in England, and was the first to sing the title rôle in the United States. He sang also with Jenny Lind and with Patti, when la diva was a child and stood on a table to sing. He went to California in 1861, and wrote the incidental music for many plays, including that which Adelaide Neilson always used for "Cymbeline." Mr. Leach, who was born at Romsey, England, was seventy-five years of age.

The composer, VINCENZO VENTURELLI, known by his numerous and pleasing songs, died, on August 22, at Mantua (by suicide), aged forty-four. He brought out an opera, "Il Conte di Lara," in 1876, at Florence, which met with but little success, and leaves the finished score of another operatic work, entitled "Maria di Xeres."

We record the death, on the 10th ult., at Barneget Park, New Jersey, of Captain ALFRED THOMPSON, artist, playwright, librettist, and novelist. He wrote several pantomimes and helped to found the Empire Music Hall. Eleven years since he went to America, where he wrote libretti and designed both scenery and costumes. He once exhibited at the Royal Academy. Captain Thompson was sixty-four years of age.

The death of WILLIAM SCHARFENBERG, which occurred on August 8, removed a figure which had been familiar and prominent in the musical life of New York for many years. Mr. Scharfenberg went to America in 1838, and made his first appearance as a pianist in Hummel's Septet. He at once took a leading position as a concert-player and as a teacher, a position which he held for many years. He was prominent in the organisation of the Philharmonic Society and became its President in 1863, retaining that post until the Society had reached its twenty-fifth season. He abandoned the practice of the profession of music for its mercantile side, becoming senior member of the music publishing firm of Scharfenberg and Luis. Throughout his long life he took a most active interest in the promotion of the best of musical projects, and at his death left a large circle of friends, not a few of whom had found him a loving guide, philosopher, and friend.

On the 17th ult., JAMES HOFFMANN, music professor at the Established Church Training College, Aberdeen, in his fiftieth year. He was a native of Germany and was educated at Leipzig. After teaching in the South of England and at Banff, he settled in Aberdeen about twenty years ago.

The death occurred, last month, at Frankfort-on-Main, of FRAU FRANZISKA RÜBSAMEN-VEITH, a once brilliant vocalist, and for many years a highly esteemed teacher of her art. A native of Cologne, the deceased lady commenced her career as a kind of "youthful prodigy," and upon the advice of the late Dr. Hiller, who recognised her exceptional talent, Fräulein Veith, at the age of sixteen, was sent by her parents to Auber, in Paris, who readily accepted her as his pupil. Her course of study completed, she speedily attained great popularity as an operatic singer at various German lyrical establishments, including Frankfort-on-Main, where for a number of years she was a special favourite with the public, she being also a much appreciated Concert-singer. After her marriage with Dr. Rüksamen, a well-known vocal professor, she took up her residence permanently at the latter town, devoting herself for the last twenty-three years most successfully to teaching, and forming a number of distinguished pupils. According to the testimony of Auber and of Franz Lachner, Frau Rüksamen-Veith was an artist who, with the possession of exceptional gifts, combined a singularly unassuming and retiring disposition.

We have also to record the following deaths:—

On August 14, at Bremen, JULIUS CARIUS, excellent violoncellist, for many years member of the Bremen Concert Orchestra and of the Böttjer Quartet Party, aged eighty-two.

On August 20, at Warsaw, Major-General ALEXANDER DE KARANDIJEV, Intendant-General of the Imperial Opera, aged forty-five.

On August 27, at Saint-Mandé (by his own hand), M. RAYMOND, successful author of vaudevilles and comedies, aged fifty-one.

Recently, at Quogue (Long Island), WILLIAM SCHARFENBERG, esteemed composer and pianist, aged seventy-six.

On the 4th ult., at Rostock, where he had lived in retirement, BERNHARD MÜLLER, violinist, formerly of the Meiningen orchestra, viola player in the once celebrated quartet party of the (younger) brothers Müller, aged seventy-one.

On the 10th ult., at Denton House, Longbeach Road, Lavender Hill, MARY ANN IRELAND, widow of John Alexander Ireland, of the Royal Society of Musicians, aged seventy-eight.

The death is announced, last month, at New York, of AUGUST GEMÜNDER, the celebrated violin maker. He was a native of Württemberg, and was apprenticed to his father, a violin manufacturer of some note. He subsequently went to the United States, and established himself, in 1846, in Massachusetts, where he soon acquired a very high reputation. His instruments were used by many distinguished players, amongst them August Wilhelmj and Herr Brodsky, and he copied Señor Sarasate's "Amati" so successfully that the great Spanish violinist pronounced it to be equal to the original. The deceased had attained the mature age of eighty-one.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—As the points whereon we differed were unimportant, I had not intended to trouble you with any further remarks; but a paragraph in one of your contemporaries this month shows how very necessary my utterances were, and also how, after a question has been thrashed out, someone can always be found to get up and calmly revert to the original view which, one flatters oneself, one has thoroughly dispelled. With young ladies this is only to be expected, but in an educational journal it is rather disheartening.

The writer in question, after mis-stating my views, through inability to summarise clearly, first asks the old, old question, "How do I account for the difference which we all feel between inspired and uninspired music?" When I can find some signs of unanimity as to which works deserve which epithet I will deal with the question. We may think, for instance, that a Beethoven Symphony is the sublime height to which music can reach; but how often is one performed in Italy? In a list of the most "inspired" composers, most Frenchmen would certainly put Meyerbeer near to the head—most Germans or Englishmen near to the tail! Next, our writer says, "The scholarship and mental labour of two compositions being equal, why does one warm the heart while the other leaves it cold?" The case is, I think, an impossible one; but certainly two works involving equal quantity and quality of labour would be equal in merit. As to warming the heart, that is another story. A work of no merit whatever will sometimes do that, while a work of the highest merit will produce no effect at all if the performance be indifferent or the hearer unsympathetically disposed. The influence of music upon the emotions often depends upon circumstances quite apart from its artistic value.

Finally, your contemporary quotes some verses which, he avers, express his view, as they certainly do express the general public's unthinking view on the subject of "inspiration."

He hears the music of his heart,
But knows not whence the breath is blown;
It comes from regions far apart,
With power beyond his own.

A presence at his side alights,
A whisper at his ear is heard;
Amazed, he takes the pen and writes
The inevitable word.

Now this is all very pretty and poetic, but you must confess it is not very practical or helpful to either teacher or pupil. Further, in no great art-work have I ever found that the composer "amazed" has written any "inevitable word," still less that "a presence" has dictated it. To my thinking, the greatness of the man and his work consists in his having chosen the best course out of many, such choice being the result of long years of training and experience plus memory and the intense desire to do better than the best. Without all this no angel whispers will help him from writing bosh. There is, indeed, one very intangible and elusive factor—individuality; elusive because it influences the judgment, yet is itself influenced to an unlimited extent by education and environment. It is here, and here only, that impenetrable mystery confronts us, so the teacher has to make what allowance he must in this direction.—Faithfully yours,

F. CORDER.

TITLES FOR MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In the course of a criticism on a work of mine which has lately been performed, entitled "The Battle of Flowers," and which I designated a "descriptive overture," a writer in the Observer of the 1st ult. took exception to my using such a sub-title on the grounds, I suppose, that the "piece," as he thinks it should be called, is not in any sense preludious, nor is it of the type generally styled a "Concert-Overture." Thinking that controversial matter on a point purely musical was hardly suited to the columns of the Observer, and being, as well, very sensible of the kindly appreciation accorded me in that paper (apart from the little "dig" which is the raison d'être of this letter), I have followed the example of the choleric old gentleman who wants to regulate the world from his arm-chair at the club, and who, thinking that "the country is going to the dogs, sir!" usually tries to stop the canine tendency by writing off post-haste to The Times.

Many musical terms that meant no specific thing or object when first used have become fixed in the present-day meaning. The words "sonata" and "concerto," for instance, had but the vaguest significance till the great masters crystallized them into definite and arbitrary shape. With the overture, however, it is entirely different, for, assuming the exact interpretation of the word, the most formless piece ever written is still an overture providing it precedes something and its writer chooses to call it so; while the most "beautifully made" absolute or programme music, correct in matter, form, and working, cannot, strictly speaking, be an overture; but is merely so styled by reason of its similarity to what should be the form of "pieces" which precede the best operatic and dramatic works. Clearly, then, to call a composition that is complete in itself an overture is a misnomer; while to write programme or descriptive works and christen them overtures is a crime the horror of which poor Mendelssohn never realised when he wrote his many works of that character. Even though the music be not suggestive of anything in the sense of a programme, the mere fact of labelling it proscribes it from the ranks of overtures ("In Memoriam" is an instance of this). A triton like Dr. C. H. H. Parry may "hedge" the difficulty by calling a work of his an "Overture to an unwritten Tragedy" and nobody winces, but when your humble servant, the minnow, employs a term that has usage for its only justification, he promptly receives an extremely courteous version of the Lancashire greeting: "Ullo, here's a stranger; let's jump on 'im!" One is considered unpatriotic if one uses words of the Tonbilder type, while Liszt has elaborated the formless form of the Symphonic Poem till even that term has ceased to be a haven of refuge for the writer of programme or descriptive music. He is not altogether without comfort, however, for he can lay the flattering unction to his soul that in the misuse of the term overture he errs in very good company, and that, bad as he is, the writer of "a deed without a name" (otherwise a concert-overture in something-or-other) is a much greater sinner. There are, doubtless, vast possibilities in the use of the word "piece" (our American cousins speak of an orchestra of eighty persons as consisting of so many "pieces"); but when one is nobody in particular it is absolutely necessary that one should make one's works as attractive as possible from every point of view, otherwise the dimly distant chance of their ever being performed vanishes. "Piece" is not a musically alluring name, though its vagueness indicates a certain affinity with things artistic.—Yours faithfully,

T. H. FREWIN.

THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW.

GRADUATED EXERCISES FOR ELEMENTARY CLASSES
IN BOTH NOTATIONS.

In the October issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW a series of graduated exercises in both notations is commenced. These exercises will be adapted for use in school and other classes beginning an Autumn course. They will provide not only easy sight singing studies to be done in the class room, but exercises suitable for home study.
With blackboard work and an educational method of teaching songs, they will probably suffice for the needs of many school classes, or they will usefully supplement a regular class book.

School songs in both notations, and studies and tests of a more advanced character, will also be given as heretofore in the music section.

TO PUPIL TEACHERS AND OTHER STUDENTS.

LESSONS ON INTERVALS AND THEIR NOMENCLATURE.

The identification and nomenclature of intervals is one of the difficulties of elementary musical theory.

With a view to assist Teachers and Students a set of plain lessons upon this topic is commenced in the October issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW.

The system of naming recommended by the Education Department, the Royal Academy of Music, Trinity College, &c., will be used.

THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW,

Published on the First of every Month,

Price (Letterpress and Music), 1½d.; Annual Subscription (including Postage), 2s.

Teachers and others who wish to secure a regular supply of the letterpress section are recommended to order THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW in advance. Only the music is reprinted according demand.

TWELVE TRIOS

BY

J. G. ALBRECHTSBERGER.

Edited and Arranged for the Organ, with Pedal Obbligato, by ARTHUR W. MARCHANT,
Mus. Bac., Oxon.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

These Twelve Trios are probably now for the first time printed on three staves. When submitted to Sir John Stainer for his approval he at once recognised their great utility to students of the Organ, especially to those who intend to become professional organists, and he suggested that they should be issued as a Supplement to his Organ Primer (to follow Exercises 91-93). They will also be found most valuable as preliminary studies to Bach's Six Sonatas for two Manuals and Pedal.

BRUCE STEANE'S
CANTATA

COURT CIRCULAR.

On Wednesday evening, May 22, 1895, Mr. Bruce Steane's admirable new sacred cantata, "The Ascension," received its first public rendition under the auspices of the Norwood and District Choral Society. The cantata, which is a most musicianly, and, indeed, in every way notable composition, achieved a most unqualified success, and should be joyfully hailed as an addition to our high-class Church festival music. "The Ascension" of Mr. Bruce Steane should be chosen for interpretation by the conductors of great festivals like those of Leeds, Birmingham, or "The Three Choirs," for of such the work is quite worthy. Mr. Steane must be awarded high praise for the splendid tone-poem he has given to the world; and it may be regarded as quite a remarkable accession to the list of religious musical works available for use in Britain.

NORWOOD PRESS.

In "The Ascension" the Bible narrative has been judiciously wedded to music of a high order, some extremely pretty orchestral parts being introduced. The composer has been eminently successful with the choruses, which increase in interest and effectiveness as the work proceeds, finally culminating in a grand burst of harmony, "Glory be to God on high." Hardly had the last notes of the concluding chorus died away when the audience burst into loud applause, which was renewed with even greater enthusiasm as the composer appeared on the platform in response.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Bruce Steane's "Ascension" is a work that is instinct with devotional spirit and sound musicianship. It has all the elements of popularity, and contains nothing derogatory either to art or to religion.

CHURCH TIMES.

An excellent cantata is "The Ascension" by Bruce Steane. The whole work is full of vigorous music, having several admirable airs for tenor and soprano, and all the choruses are capital. The words have been selected by the Rev. Gresham F. Gillett from the Holy Scriptures and from other sources in a very careful and praiseworthy manner.

LLOYD'S NEWS.

A cantata as satisfactory to religious feeling as it is grateful to the ear is Mr. Bruce Steane's "The Ascension." It has sustained, melodious passages that command attention, whilst the devotional spirit is maintained throughout. The choruses are well written but at no point difficult. "The Ascension" deserves to become one of the most popular of Church cantatas.

MUSICAL NEWS.

Mr. Steane's music is throughout tuneful and musicianly, grateful to vocalists and effectively scored. We heartily commend this cantata to the notice of choirmasters.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Mr. Bruce Steane's sacred cantata "The Ascension" is a capably written, meritorious work.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

In accordance with the Decree concerning Church Music, drawn up by the Sacred Congregation of Rites, and approved of by His Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., on the 7th of July, 1894, I have revised this edition of Schubert's Masses.

Article 10 of this Decree says:—"Every piece in which words are found to be omitted, deprived of their meaning, or indistinctly repeated is forbidden."

Article 11 says:—"It is forbidden to break up into pieces, completely detached, the verses which are necessarily interconnected."

While correcting the omissions which have been made in the text, I have altered the music as little as possible; but in no instance has the Composer's harmony been interfered with.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

* UNA

4TH AND 5TH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
OCTOBER 4, 1893."Una" is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

† THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Seventh and Eighth Thousand.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my Soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE
BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

* JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Sixteenth to Twentieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

5TH AND 6TH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

† ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, * 7s. 6d.; † 5s. per 100.

"It is refreshing, after wading through countless specimens of the ordinary British ballad, to come across a set of songs so artistic in design as those contained in the album labelled 'Seven Songs,' by Sir John Stainer. . . . Amateurs on the look-out for something really good may confidently be recommended to devote their attention to these admirable songs."—Morning Post.

VOICE-TRAINING STUDIES

In Six separate Books, for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass.

BY EMIL BEHNKE AND DR. CHARLES W. PEARCE.

"This work contains 24 Progressive Studies in different styles, and is intended as a companion or supplementary volume to 'Voice-Training Exercises.' Those of a more cantabile character are to be used as Solfeggi, the others are to be sung as Vocalises. In this Second Edition the accompaniments have been simplified. Highly favourable opinions of these Studies have been expressed by Sir John Stainer, Sir Robert Stewart, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and other eminent authorities."

"There can be little doubt that these 'Studies,' which are published in separate keys for all voices, will share the popularity of the 'Exercises.'"—Sunday Times.

"We have no doubt that the second volume will equal the first in popularity."—Morning Post.

"I am glad to find you are still going ahead in your valuable sphere of work. The 'Voice-Training Studies' are a solid and sound contribution to the repertory of teachers and students."—Sir John Stainer.

"Your new book of 'Voice-Training Studies' is admirable, and will prove of very great value to students and teachers. I like it much."—C. Vincent, Mus. Doc.

SANTLEY'S SINGING MASTER

CONTAINING

ADVICE TO THE MASTER AND STUDENT, EXERCISES, VOCALIZZI, &c.

IN TWO PARTS, PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS NET EACH.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Any words emanating from such a master of vocal art as Mr. Santley are worthy of consideration and the appearance of the first instalment of a Tutor from his pen must receive attention. Mr. Santley also gives hints to teachers, his instructions with respect to the blending of the registers are well worthy of note, as are the examples illustrating the difference between good and bad methods of vocalisation."—Athenæum.

"This is a capital work, and is worthy of the attention of the studious. The exercises comprised in the work are the basis of singing, and should be invaluable to those desirous of cultivating their vocal powers."—Civil Service Gazette.

"This new and valuable volume, which has just been published, is an excellent addition to the vocalist's library. The work is one which recommends itself to all who wish to study the art of vocalisation."—Times.

"Messrs. Chappell and Co. have just published the first part of 'Santley's Singing Master,' which contains a series of more than seventy admirably graduated vocal exercises, and a preface and an introduction in which the famous baritone gives much sensible advice to both teachers and students."—Manchester Guardian.

"This new Singing Tutor, by the greatest of English baritones, is most welcome, and students and teachers will find it an exceedingly valuable book. The instructions to masters and pupils will be found of great value to both. The handbook is comprehensive and cheap, and no doubt will receive the welcome it deserves on its merits."—The Freeman's Journal.

"CHARLES GOUNOD."

"Crystal Palace Company, London, S.E."

"I was so favourably impressed by your highly artistic rendering of the pieces which you sang at the Concert here recently, that I have placed you on the list of those tenor vocalists whom I consider worthy of an occasional engagement at our very best class of concerts, and I hope that I may soon have a chance to hear you here again."

"AUGUST MANNS, Musical Director."

"As a tenor, Mr. C. W. Fredericks, principal tenor of Lichfield Cathedral; of the Trocadero, Paris; Crystal Palace and St. James's Hall, London, and the principal Provincial Concerts, is pre-eminently adapted for oratorio singing, though in 'St. Paul' he has very few opportunities of distinguishing himself or even giving a fair exhibition of his fine voice and compass. Still his rendering of the tenor solos was exceedingly good, and showed to a slight extent his vocal capacities. Mr. Fredericks, who visited Jersey in 1886, quite kept, if not enhanced, his reputation."—Extract from the Jersey Express, May 2, 1895.

HENRY PURCELL: AN APPRECIATION.

BY JOSEPH BENNETT.

THAT is not a perfect state of things in which past greatness comes to honour chiefly through the agency of times and seasons. It should always be so present as not to need the help of an almanack. But, on the other hand, we have cause to be thankful when times and seasons bring to mind that which otherwise, perhaps, we should overlook, or discern so faintly as to fall short of due homage. Hence all reflecting men welcome the approaching bi-centenary of Purcell's death as an opportunity of making known to the ignorant or careless how fine a genius passed away two hundred years ago. It is to be feared that the vast majority of living Englishmen belong to the ignorant or the careless in this matter, but they are not wholly to be blamed, since the tooth of Time eats away the reputation of a musical composer more quickly than that of any other creative artist. The painter, the sculptor, the architect live in works which, being visible, make a direct impression, according to the receptivity of those who behold them. The works of the musician are not hung in galleries, or placed on pedestals, or lifted to the clouds as dome or spire. They are not apparent to sense at all until the executive artist conveys them in sound which dies almost as soon as it is born, and he is generally too much concerned with the productions of his own day to spare time for others belonging to a distant past. These often dwell in dust and silence. "For nothing," wrote Purcell's contemporary, Roger North, "is more a fashion than musick; no, not cloathes, or language, either of which is made a derision to after times. . . . And the grand custom of all is to affect novelty, and to goe from one thing to another, and despise the former." Nevertheless, "it is a poorness of spirit, and a low method of thinking, that inclines men to pronounce for the present and allow nothing to times past." The writer should rather have ascribed the result to superficiality. We look on the outside and judge by it. If the outside be strange, we are amused—what diversion lies in a book of costumes, be the figures clothed upon ever so noble and beautiful! Nevertheless, the quaintest, most antiquated form of expression may convey great thoughts, and great thoughts are independent of surface changes. When we have the power to recognise them, it matters not a whit in what shape they reach us. If, on the other hand, we lack such power, shape necessarily determines our opinion. There is still hope for whatever is lofty and true in the music of the past, and while awaiting its fruition we could do much worse than celebrate times and seasons by festivities which at least may stir the unthinking to enquiry, while strengthening our own faith.

Roger North quaintly shaped an important question when he followed up the remarks already quoted by asking: "Cannot wee put ourselves in loco of former states and judge pro tunc?" That is how all the men and movements of the past should be estimated, for it is a manifest absurdity to decide in the light of conditions and circumstances which were non-existent when they had their being. Besides, by so doing we put ourselves in the way of condemnation, since as we deal with the past so, if our example be followed, will the present be treated when it, too, has become a past. "It is a shallow monster," again I call North in evidence, "that shall hold forth in favour of our fashions and relishes, and maintains that no age shall come wherein they will not be despised and derided. And if, on the other side, I may take on me to be a fiddling prophet, I may, with as much reason, declare that the time may come when some of the present celebrated musick will be as much in contempt as

'John, com kiss me now, now, now,'* and perhaps with as much reason as any is found for the contrary at present." Let us then try to keep away from a position which might vitiate our conclusions and, judging of former states, "put ourselves in loco."

Henry Purcell is said to have come into the world about the time when the great Lord Protector went out of it. The coincidence is not without significance, if we regard Cromwell as representing the spirit of that Puritanism which, for a time, crushed music in England. I sometimes hear, by the way, that the Puritans were not persecutors but rather abettors of the "divine art." Surely that is a generalisation from very insufficient data. Cromwell, it is true, had a love of music, and so had his Latin secretary, John Milton, but how as to the grim religionists who, a hundred years before Purcell was born, proposed in Convocation the removal of organs from the churches and were beaten by only one vote; who returned to the charge in 1571 and in the "forties" of the next century silenced the hated instruments, broke up the choirs and suppressed all public manifestations of an art which had so long ministered to the men of Belial. Their dour spirit long survived the Restoration, and as late as 1828 we find Adam Clarke declaring the question of music in worship to be one of those which "are at present rending the Church of Christ and scattering the flock." All this deepens the significance of the fact that Purcell came into life with a fresh régime, mingling his baby cries with the French tunes which "old Rowley" introduced, and his reactionary subjects turned, like a sweet morsel, under their tongue. A new spirit was abroad; the dry bones of the art began to stir, and it seemed fitting in the order of Providence that one should be born able to shape developments aright.

Here we must look for a moment at the condition of music in England at the time of Purcell's advent. How much it had suffered under Puritan rule may be judged from the statement of Matthew Locke that "for above a year after the opening of His Majesty's Chapel the orderers of the Musick there were necessitated to supply the superior parts of their Musick with cornets and men's feigned voices, there being not one lad for all that time capable of singing his part readily." This dearth of singers does not appear to have been confined to boys. In Roger North's "Life of the Lord Keeper" we read: "In these Churches (the Cathedrals of York and Durham) wind music was used in the choir, which I apprehend may have been introduced at first for want of voices, if not of organs, but, as I hear, they are now disused." A generation was growing up without knowledge of music, and, as to the "masters" of the age, what were they? Most of these good people took shelter with the King at Oxford when the "troubles" grew to a head, and remained there through the interregnum and Protectorate because there only such of them as could not find a place in Cavalier households were able to pick up a living. "But when," says Wood, "King Charles was restored, and Episcopacy and Cathedrals with him, then did the Meetings (at Oxford) decay, especially for this reason, because the Masters of Music were called away to Cathedrals and Collegiate Choirs." This author gives the names of the "masters"—W. Ellis, Mus. Bac.; Professor Wilson, Curtis, Thomas Jackson, E. Low, and others—all now names and very little more. As visitors to Oxford, Wood mentions Davis Mell, the violinist; T. Baltzar, another violinist, from Lubeck; while of amateurs who took their part in the performances the number is legion. It seems clear that, during the later and more tolerant years of the Protectorate, when Cromwell had his foot on the necks of Puritan and Royalist alike, Oxford was the headquarters of English music. Other masters, not specially identified with Oxford, were Child, Christopher Gibbons, Rogers, Matthew Locke, Banister, Jenkins, and, after the Restoration, Blow, Pelham Humfrey, and others. Why continue the list? All were good men in their way; serviceable men, too, in that they took up the almost extinguished torch of music and fanned it again into a flame. But, generally speaking, these musicians left their art pretty much as they found it—a playground for conceits and ingenious contrapuntal exercises, where there was little truth to nature and correspondingly low vitality. The time was ripe for a man of genius, and he came, in all the majesty and strength with which the Great King clothes the depositories of His highest gifts.

Purcell's boyhood was passed under conditions of, for that period, unusual stimulus. Not only had music, after hiding in "dens and caves of the earth," found itself at liberty to bask in the sun, but Royalty smiled upon it in very practical fashion. Charles the Second was not the wisest of men, neither was his influence upon the morals of his day the best conceivable; but he did something for music, not only by re-establishing the Royal Chapel, but by bringing into this country the band of violins which may, with some truth, be regarded as the foundation of our modern orchestra. With these instruments came Cambert from the Court of France, to organise their use. The Italian Sonata arrived in company, and a new world was opened up. As a chorister at the Chapel Royal, Henry Purcell was in the midst of all these developments, and his known precocity gives us a guarantee that they excited in him the liveliest interest. It may or may not be true that he wrote anthems while still a boy, but it is a fact that at seventeen he composed the music to "Dido and Æneas," and at one stroke achieved a reputation. If we marvel at that music now, how must it have struck the lad's contemporaries by the sensitiveness of its recitative; the fresh beauty of melodies which, compared with the ordinary model, were "as Hyperion to a satyr," and the spirit of such choruses as "To the hills and the vales"? But most of all, the pathos of the closing numbers came as a beloved at Court. The native powers of the young musician were, no doubt, fired by the music of Italy, that being ever the source to which he went when he would kindle his genius anew. The grace and passion of the South, the intense humanity which could only express its strength in song, found a rich seed-bed in the nature of this son of the North, and revelation. Here were new voices which the dullest could recognise as those of human feeling. A master-hand, though that of a youth, had touched them into life and speech. How did Purcell become equal to such things? Assuredly not by studying the works of his English predecessors, not by contact with the circumscribed genius of worthy Dr. Blow, nor by listening to the French trivialities so reproduced themselves there, modified certainly, but still rich and full. It is, however, to the inborn qualities of Purcell that we must look for that in his music which was, and is, independent of form and fashion—for boldness of conception, vigorous play of imagination, and daring which drew upon resources none before had ventured to touch. These characteristics lift Purcell to the rank of an Immortal, because nothing can destroy them and they are himself. You cannot kill great thoughts. They enter into the scheme of the universe and, like it, are imperishable. "Beautiful it is to understand and know," says Carlyle, "that a thought did never yet die." Not only beautiful, but infinitely consoling to those who mourn because so many great musical creations of the past are denied the place and influence that belong to them. But they are not dead, and some day all that is vital of them may enter again into the activities of the world.

* Once a very popular tune.

It is further necessary to bear in mind the very limited means of expression which Purcell found to his hand. There was little of what we now know as vocal skill; melody was crude and stiff; inflexible rules kept harmony moving along a few rigid lines, and instrumental music can scarcely be said to have existed—at best, it was in its infancy. These conditions may not have seemed hard to the average composer of the day, whose capacity they, no doubt, well suited, but genius could not exist within their narrow limits. Purcell was one of the earliest illustrations of the fact that a great composer must, as of necessity, burst the bounds of contemporary art, and flow over at some point or other till scope enough is obtained for what he has to do. Bach, Handel, Mozart—all the illustrious masters have thus, like a spreading empire, annexed new realms to the domain of music, and their successors yet to come will doubtless do the same. Purcell was bound so to act. Young, ardent, full of conceptions still to be regarded as great, and, in their day, astonishing, our English master made space for himself beyond the limits of the schools, and gave to his country what might almost be styled a new art. It is interesting to note in what manner and along what lines this fertile and fertilising genius overflowed.

First among English composers Purcell recognised and worked out the connection between the word and the tone upon which, a hundred and fifty years later, Wagner so strongly insisted. His contemporaries generally used words as a mere vehicle for music, not regarding them as essentially connected therewith. Purcell deemed it his first business so to adapt the music as that the words should derive therefrom all possible strength and significance. I have no space here for examples, nor is there need for them, since every reader can find plenty ready to his hand. Let him take the first Purcell recitative or air that presents itself, and, paying no heed to possible concessions to the taste of the day, note the care and success with which the text is touched and heightened by the composer's art. Every accent is studied; every important word made musically conspicuous. The cue to this great change was found, no doubt, in Italian vocal music; but it is the distinction of Purcell that he dealt successfully with a much less flexible and gracious tongue than that of Carissimi and Stradella, and, before all others, showed its capabilities in alliance with song. How just were his views of that alliance we know from his own testimony in the preface to "Dioclesian." After styling music "the exaltation of poetry," Purcell adds: "Both of them may excel apart, but surely they are most excellent when they are joyn'd, because nothing is then wanting to either of their proportions: for thus they appear like Wit and Beauty in the same person." Note the completeness of the unity here suggested. Not only is each art the complement of the other, but both belong "to the same person." No union could possibly be closer than that indicated by the figure here chosen.

That Purcell did not shrink from extending the bounds of form fully appears by comparison of his anthems with those of other masters living in the same period; but his daring is most conspicuous in harmony which must have greatly shocked the pedantic ears of his generation. Excellent Dr. Burney, while acutely discerning many excellences in some of the master's innovations, shakes his head dubiously at sight of others. Burney was too good a judge not to recognise the full value of Purcell's work, but he examined it through the spectacles of his day, and mistook for spots on the sun what were defects inherent in the glasses. Take an example: "The first movement of his (Purcell's) full anthem in eight parts, 'O Lord God of hosts,' is a noble composition alla Palestrina, in which all the laws of fugue upon two, and sometimes more, subjects are preserved inviolable; the harmony, though bold, is, in general, chaste; and the effect of the whole spirited and majestic. The second movement is extremely pathetic and expressive," here the good man begins to see the spots; "but, both in that and the last movement, he seems trying experiments in harmony; and, in hazarding new combinations, he seems now and then to give the ear more pain than pleasure." In a foot-note the Doctor is more precise with regard to these blemishes, and says: "Purcell is so classical a composer for the Church that his harmonical licenses become authority and may lead young students into error. It is right, therefore, to specify the places in these two last movements which are most likely to offend cultivated ears at present. In the last bar but one of p. 167, the B flat in the second soprano; p. 168, l. i. bar 3, the C sharp in the first counter-tenor; ib. l. iii. bar 2, the 6th with the 7th to D sharp; and bar 6, the same line, the natural 3rd, sharp 7th, and 9th, to D natural; and the sharp 3rd, with the natural 6th in the next bar; p. 170, the same combination occurs three several times, and, to my ear, seems jargon at all times and places: and, indeed, the 6th with the 7th, which we find twice more in the last movement, affect me always with the idea of wrong notes in the performance." This criticism seems very much as though a man, visited by an angel, should take up the celestial robe and find fault with its texture. But the principle of such examination is right enough. We are not to discourage innovation and experiment, but we are to "try the spirits," and refuse to accept without discrimination. But mark the shrewdness of Burney in the two words I have italicised. As he wrote, the idea flashed upon him that accustomed ears may accept chords which ears unaccustomed would reject, and, trying to free himself from bondage. The passages which Dr. Burney questioned were but indications of broken fetters—of cords snapped asunder in the struggle to throw aside every weight and run freely the race set before him. So viewed, each example of "jargon," no matter how crude and harsh, has an interest for us. It belongs to the story of a great life and heroic aims; it marks a stage in the development of the mystery we call genius.

very sagely, he added, "at present," to his statement of offence.

Now neither myself nor, I fancy, any other admirer and student of Purcell would undertake to defend the master's procedure in every case. When a man launches out into the unknown, his ignorance of the way almost inevitably causes mistakes—but a truce to such comparatively small considerations. I prefer to look at Purcell, not as offending pedantic ears, or as occasionally making a false step, but as a young giant, conscious of strength,

Greatest of all the Purcell expansions is that most difficult to define. One can tell with ease how the old English master clothed his Muse in more graceful robes of melody; how he varied and heightened the harmony of her speech; and how, from regions before unexplored, he brought, with here and there a pebble, offering of strange gems wherewith to adorn her. But music has qualities not so palpable—qualities rather to be felt than perceived, which steal past the senses unnoticed, and are recognised only when the soul of the art touches and mingles with the soul of its votary. Every musician knows what I mean by these words, and is conscious of the undefinable, but none the less real, impression which great music conveys we scarcely know how, and certainly cannot explain by reference to technicalities. When Jubal's listening brethren fell on their faces their worship was not of him or of his lyre, but of the god which fancy pictured as dwelling within the shell. They were not far wrong. The mystery of true music lies close to the Divinity Whose ways are "past finding out"; the "inarticulate, unfathomable speech" is as much His voice as Nature is what Goethe calls His "living visible garment."

I could not, by ever so much and so careful quotation from Purcell's works, convey a complete idea of their wealth in the highest and subtlest qualities of music. Quotation, indeed, might tend to false conclusions, because of a now antiquated outward and visible form. The spirit of which I speak is changeless, serving for all time, and comes nearest to us not when in critical mood we examine the text, but when, listening with open souls, we pass under the influence of the master's genius. True, we do not all hear with the same ears, or with the same measure of freedom from prejudice—that disturbing and misleading element without which every man would, more or less, see good. In this matter we must individually act according to the light that is in us, and, for myself, I say that, despite much in Purcell's works which belongs to the fashion of the time, and much other hardly to be classed as specially distinctive, I know scarcely one example absolutely wanting in the note of genius—in that sublime trumpet call which summons every hearer to attention, and subdues him to its will. Dryden, in his well-known Ode on the death of Purcell, is very bold, and represents the master as teaching his angel-escort to the skies:

The heavenly choir, who heard his notes from high,
Let down the scale of Music from the sky;
They handed him along,
And all the way he taught, and all the way they sang.

So another poet in the same daring strain:

Thou didst for Refuge fly
To re-assume thy Station in the Sky:
There Heavenly Carols to compose and sing
To Heaven's harmonious King,
Where, rapt in transports of extatic Song,
Amidst the inspired seraphic throng,
Crown'd with Celestial, ever blooming Bays,
Thou sitt'st dissolved in Halleluiahs.

But greater homage than these stately measures comes from the music-lover who, listening to such anthems as "O give thanks," "O Lord God of Hosts," and "Be merciful unto me"; to the splendid "Te Deum" (now happily rid of Boyce's shameless handiwork), or to such songs as "Ye twice ten-hundred deities," "Let the dreadful engines," "From rosy bowers," and "From silent shades," feels beating upon him a light which no mere technical skill could kindle, and hears a language never taught in schools because its secret is incommunicable.

Examination of Purcell's music from a purely critical point of view lies outside the limits of this article. I have tried to write an appreciation by showing broadly the limitations through which this master had to break before he could sing his divine song in freedom, by pointing to the rare qualifications with which he was endowed, and the splendid successes which, after the lapse of two centuries, still keep his name flaming in the firmament of music. Alas that he died so soon! that he was so beloved of the gods! Like Schubert, he laboured abundantly, pouring forth work after work as though knowing that his sun would go down while it was yet day; also like that prodigy, he departed early, with his life being destroyed infinite possibilities of achievement and of an unexampled inheritance for those coming after him. The generation which survived our gifted master mourned him in verse and song, but it needed some great passionate soul to chant a fitting strain—such a strain as the lament which raised, in the Temple of Grief, an everlasting memorial to another child of genius early called away:—

Weep for Adonais. . . . for he is dead!
Oh, weep for Adonais! though our tears
Thaw not the frost which binds so dear a head!
And thou, sad Hour, selected from all years
To mourn our loss, rouse thy obscure compeers,
And teach them thine own sorrow, say: with me
Died Adonais; till the Future dares Forget the Past, his fate and fame shall be An echo and a light unto eternity.

A BRIEF LIFE OF PURCELL.

By WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

THAT Henry Purcell was born in 1658 there can be no doubt, although it has not been possible, as yet, to discover any baptismal entry, nor with certainty the precise locality of his birthplace. His father, also named Henry, was acting in "The Siege of Rhodes" in 1656, at the performances given by Sir William Davenant in a room behind Rutland House, Aldersgate Street, and probably resided near there, in the City of London. A search in the registers of the City Parishes may some day reveal Purcell's birthplace. In the year following the birth of Purcell, his father spent an afternoon in the company of Pepys, the diarist, and Matthew Locke, the musician. This is recorded by Pepys under date February 21, 1659: "After dinner I back to Westminster Hall—here I met with Mr. Lock and Purcell, masters of musique, and with them to the coffee house, into a room next the water, by ourselves, where we spent an hour or two." In 1661 the father, and of course his son with him, lived in a house in the "Great Almonry South," and here they resided until 1664, when the father died, leaving his son to the care of his uncle, Thomas Purcell, who gladly accepted the responsibility. Thomas was a gentleman and lutenist of the Chapel Royal, and in favour with Charles II. and the Court; he therefore immediately obtained admission for the child into the choir of the Chapel Royal, when, of course, the lad went to reside with the master of the boys, Captain Henry Cooke, who, like many other musicians of Charles I., had, perforce, abandoned the art of music to fight for his king; and at the Restoration, having resumed his former position in the Chapel Royal, had, by command of the king, composed the music for the Coronation. For eight years Purcell had the advantage of Cooke's instruction, and that he profited by it is proved by various pieces of music; for example, "Sweet tyranness," composed when he was nine years of age; another, when he was eleven years old, was "The address of the Children of the Chapel Royal to the King, and their master, Captain Cooke, on his Majestie's Birthday, A.D. 1670, composed by Master Purcell, one of the Children of the said Chapel."

Many of his anthems now in use were composed before he was fifteen years of age, and the like may be said of the music to "Macbeth." When Purcell was fourteen years of age his master, Captain Cooke, died, and the youthful composer received further instruction from Pelham Humfrey, a musical genius who had the good fortune to receive instruction from Lully in Paris. The association of Purcell and Humfrey lasted for two years only, the latter died in 1674. How much Purcell learnt from him it is not possible to say, but it is significant that there exists an anthem by Humfrey, altered and improved by Purcell. When his voice broke he remained attached to the Chapel Royal and received instruction from Dr. Blow, who succeeded to the mastership of the Chapel boys and was organist of Westminster Abbey. Through Blow's influence Purcell was appointed copyist to Westminster Abbey in 1676. Probably his official connection with the Chapel Royal then ceased, and he went to live with his Uncle Thomas, who resided amongst the nobility in Pall Mall. Purcell was at this time composing music for the theatres; maybe he was introduced to this kind of work by Locke, his father's and his own friend, whom he commemorated in a musical ode, entitled "On the death of his Worthy Friend, Mr. Matthew Locke, musick composer to His Majesty, and Organist of Her Majesties Chapel, who Dyed August, 1677." In the following year Purcell resigned the copyistship at Westminster Abbey, in order to devote his time to composition for theatre and church. A letter—the original in my possession—written in 1679 by his uncle to Gostling, of Canterbury Cathedral, speaks of Henry as his "son," who, he says, is composing music specially adapted for his exceptional voice. Gostling was a deep bass, and consequently in great request both at Canterbury and at the Court in London. The letter proves that Purcell must by this time have made a reputation as a composer. The letter is as follows:

"SIR,—I have received the favor of yours of the 4th with the enclosed for my son Henry: I am sorry we are like to be without you so long as yours mentions: but 'tis very likely you may have a summons to appear among us sooner than you imagine; for my son is composing wherein you will be chiefly concern'd. However your occasions and tyes where you are must be considered, and your conveniences ever complied withall: in the meantime assure yourself I shall be careful of your concerns here by minding and refreshing our master's memory of his gracious promise when there is occasion. My wife returns thanks for your compliment, with her service; and pray you give both our respects and humble services to Dr. Belk and his lady, and believe ever that I am, Sir, your affectionate and humble servant,—T. PURCELL.

"Dr. Perce is in town, but I have not seen him since. I have performed your compliments to Dr. Blow, Will Turner, etc.

"F fa ut, and E la mi are preparing for you."

Some little time after this Purcell composed that remarkable anthem, "They that go down to the sea in ships," expressly for Gostling; the solo bass part descends to the low D. The history of the anthem is interesting:—

"Charles the Second had given orders for building a yacht, which as soon as it was finished he named the Fubbs, in honour of the Duchess of Portsmouth, who, we may suppose, was in her person rather full and plump. The sculptors and painters apply this epithet to children, and say, for instance, of the boys of Flammergo, that they are fubby. Soon after the vessel was launched the King made a party to sail in the yacht down the river and found the Kentish coast; and to keep up the mirth and good humour of the company Mr. Gostling was requested to be of the number. They had got as low as the North Foreland, when a violent storm arose, in which the King and the Duke of York were necessitated, in order to preserve the vessel, to hand the sails and to work like common seamen. By good Providence, however, they escaped to land, but the distress they were in made an impression on the mind of Mr. Gostling which was never effaced. Struck with a just sense of the deliverance and the horror of the scene he had but lately viewed, upon his return to London he selected from the Psalms those passages which declare the wonders and the terrors of the deep, and gave them to Purcell to compose as an anthem, which he did, adapting it so peculiarly to the compass of Mr. Gostling's voice, which was a deep bass, that hardly any person but himself was then, or has since, been able to sing it."

In 1680 Dr. Blow, in the most generous manner, resigned his appointment of organist of Westminster Abbey in favour of Purcell, and in the following year Purcell married Frances Peters, who was probably a daughter of "Thomas Peters, Gent., of St. Clement's Danes." Purcell was then much engaged in theatrical composition, and wrote his remarkable opera "Dido and Æneas," composed for performance by the young gentlewomen of Mr. Josias Priest's school. It was necessarily brief and compact; nevertheless it is to all intents and purposes a complete opera, the whole of the words of the libretto being set to music. For such a bold experiment, Purcell had no model or precedent, and, unhappily for us, no successors or imitators. "Dido and Æneas" was more than a century in advance of the musical taste of the age. In its melodies and harmonies may be found anticipations of Handel, Bach, and even Wagner. Up to the time of his marriage Purcell continued to live with his uncle, but on taking to himself a wife he set up housekeeping, and in 1681 removed to Great St. Anne's Lane; his widowed mother had lived in Tuthill (Tothill) Street after the death of her husband; perhaps she now resided for a time with her son. From his house in Great St. Anne's Lane, which unfortunately no longer exists, Purcell published his first set of Sonatas for violins, bass, and harpsichord; a collection not only valuable on account of the remarkable superiority and excellence of the music, but also because it contains a very interesting and significant preface from the pen of the composer, and, moreover, a very fine portrait of Purcell, with the intimation that it represented him in the twenty-fourth year of his age. We know that this publication was ready for issue in the beginning of the year 1683, and therefore the portrait must have been taken in 1682, a fact which establishes the year of his birth. In 1682 Purcell was appointed organist of the Chapel Royal, much to the delight of his uncle, who died almost immediately afterwards. Purcell was at this time most industrious, full of labours in teaching, performing, and composing; he also found time to make copies of the works of his contemporaries, as may be seen in a volume now in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, in which he has written "God bless Mr. Henry Purcell, September y^e 10th, 1682." His activity and energy must have been remarkable and very exhaustive for a man with a delicate constitution. In addition to his duties as composer and organist of the Chapels Royal and of Westminster Abbey, he was composing for the theatre, church, and chamber, and also writing Odes for St. Cecilia's days and Court Festivals. He also took an active part with Father Smith in connection with the erection of a new organ in the Temple Church, which was constructed with extra keys, and had separate notes for G sharp, A flat, D sharp, E flat, probably inserted at Purcell's request to facilitate his boldness of modulation into extreme keys. Subsequently he superintended the placing of an organ in Westminster Abbey for use at the coronation of James II., in 1685, and also composed two anthems for the occasion. It is curious to note that only a few years later a tune of Purcell's composition was one of the chief factors in driving that "deluded Prince out of three kingdoms"—such is said to have been the effect of "Lillibullero."

In 1689 Purcell officiated at the coronation of William and Mary, on which occasion, in accordance with ancient custom, he admitted certain persons who desired to witness the ceremony into the organ gallery, and, as a matter of course, retained the fees they paid for the accommodation. The Dean and Chapter demanded the sum thus realised, and on Purcell's refusal to part with the money he was suspended; but we may assume that the Dean and Chapter soon discovered they were in the wrong,* as Purcell continued in the exercise of his office. Purcell's activity and industry as a composer continued with unabated vigour: the list of his works up to 1690 includes various

* I possess documents which prove that the Organist and Choir of Westminster Abbey retained and exercised similar privileges at the Coronation of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

Royal Odes—the “Yorkshire Feast Song,” music for the “Tempest,” the “Massacre of Paris,” “Amphitryon” and “Dioclesian.” The latter opera was published by subscription, with a preface by the composer, and he further announced that he examined all the copies after they were printed, making necessary corrections with his own hand. The opera achieved a great success at the time of production, and was almost immediately succeeded by “King Arthur,” of which Dryden wrote the libretto; this was followed by the “Indian Queen,” which proved equally successful. For the Festival of Saint Cecilia, November 22, 1692, Purcell wrote a fine Ode, which was performed in Stationers’ Hall; this was received “with universal applause, particularly the second stanza, which was sung with incredible graces by Mr. Purcell himself.” For a later Cecilia Festival, 1694, he composed his magnificent orchestral Te Deum and Jubilate in D, and in the following year the music for the funeral of Queen Mary. She died December 28, 1694, but was not buried until March 5 following. The day was bitterly cold, snow fell, and the Abbey itself must have been a dangerous place for an invalid. There was no means of heating the building, which seems to have been improperly glazed, for we read that a little robin which had sought refuge in the church from the inclement weather constantly flew down and perched on the hearse. The music Purcell composed for the occasion is most expressive and sublime, and served, like the music composed by the dying Mozart, for his own obsequies, which took place in the Abbey a few months later. Never robust, he had long been ailing, and probably took a chill, which hastened the consumption of which he died on Wednesday, November 21, 1695, and he was buried on the night of the following Tuesday in Westminster Abbey. The tradition that Purcell died in his house in Dean’s Yard is, I have no doubt, correct; it is true that he paid rates during 1693-4 and 5 for a house in Marsham Street, possibly for his mother to reside in, or it may have been for the Abbey chorister boys. It is also true that he received £8 per annum up to the time of his death in lieu of a house, but that amount would not suffice for the rent of a house of any size, nor does it show that he did not rent the house in Dean’s Yard. His widow advertised that she was living at “her house” in Dean’s Yard immediately after her husband’s decease, and continued to reside there for some few years. Purcell’s burial place in Westminster Abbey is indicated by a monumental tablet (of which an illustration is given in this issue) erected to his memory, and an inscription on his grave, which was renewed in 1876, and then, by permission of Dean Stanley, a further record was added, to the effect that Purcell’s widow was buried in the same grave in 1706.

PURCELL’S BIRTHPLACE AND RESIDENCES.

By J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

It is generally stated that Purcell was born in 1658. It seems, however, just as likely, or even more likely, that it was in 1659. Unfortunately it has been impossible to find the record of his baptism. The Register at St. Margaret’s Church, Westminster, for this period (which was then very carefully kept) does not show Henry Purcell’s name. The approximate date is fixed fairly well for us by the fact that in June, 1683, Purcell published some Sonatas to which his portrait was prefixed. On this portrait he is said to be “ætæt suæ 24”—i.e., in the twenty-fourth year of his age. Again, on his monument in the Abbey, we find “Anno ætætis suæ 37mo.”—i.e., in the thirty-seventh year of his age. Therefore, if he was in his thirty-seventh year on November 21, 1695 (the date of his death), he must have been born between November 21, 1658, and November 20, 1659.

Not only is his baptism during these years not recorded at St. Margaret’s, but the rate-books of St. Margaret’s for 1658 and 1659 do not contain the name of Purcell, as they certainly would had his father had a house in the parish. A friend made most careful enquiries for me on this point, and this is his report:—

“I searched all through the rate-books of St. Margaret’s for 1658 and 1659, but found no ratepayer named Purcell. I also examined the whole list for the years 1656, 1651, and 1641 with the same result.

“Vincent Novello, in his introduction to his edition of ‘Purcell’s Sacred Music,’ published in 1832, states that he was born in 1658, but that the exact place was not decisively ascertained, though ‘probably in London or Westminster.’

“Chester, in a foot-note to the record of Purcell’s burial in Westminster Abbey (Harleian Soc., Vol. X., p. 238), says: ‘was said to have been born in Old Pye Street about 1658.’”

These facts throw doubt upon the tradition that he was born in a house still standing in Little St. Ann’s Lane, Pye Street, a tradition which has come to be accepted as a fact. I myself possess a sketch of this house, which was formerly in the possession of Dean Stanley, and have very often taken admiring friends to see Purcell’s birthplace! I fear the mistake is largely owing to the enthusiasm of Mr. Richard Clarke, a former Vicar-Choral of the Abbey. He was a devoted admirer of Purcell, and very fond of antiquarian research. He got a friend to sketch this old house (in 1845), with an inscription stating boldly it was “Purcell’s birthplace” and “subsequent home.” Mr. Clarke also got an old mantelshelf from one of the rooms, and this relic for years adorned the choristers’ schoolroom in the Abbey cloisters, bearing an inscription that it came from Purcell's birthplace. I shall show presently that Purcell did live in a St. Ann's Lane, in later life, but not this St. Ann's Lane.

Although we cannot find the residence of Purcell's father in 1658 and 1659, we know for certain that he lived in "Great Almonry South," near Westminster Abbey (just opposite the present Westminster Palace Hotel), in 1661. The Almonry was the place where the gentlemen of the Abbey choir (of whom Henry Purcell, sen., was one) had residences.* Here, then, Henry Purcell, jun., lived at a very early age, probably from about his second year until his sixth. In this year his father died. This event happened on August 11, 1664.

In 1665 "Widow Pursell" paid rates in respect of a house in "Tuttle Street," and continued there until 1680. It is interesting to find Widdow Gibbons (probably the widow of Dr. C. Gibbons, Organist of the Abbey) living in the same street as Widow Purcell, and paying exactly the same amount in rates in in its original state. The mantelpiece is of the date, and the panelling and window sashes. I am indebted to the kindness of Mr. Arthur J. Foster for the accompanying sketch of this interesting old room (p. 731). As Purcell paid a full year's assessment in 1685, under additional assessments, he probably went to live in Bowling Alley at Christmas, 1684, the assessments being made up to Easter. He continued to pay rates for this house until 1691, in which year the assessment was raised to £1 1s. (In 1692 this and the next house were assessed to "Ann Peters.") In 1693 the additional assessments show "Mr. Pursell, 9s," and in 1694 and 1695, 18s. in respect of a house in Marsham Street. As the full assessment for 1695—viz., to Easter, 1696—was paid, there seems little doubt that he was resident in Marsham Street at the time of his death, on November 21, 1695.

Old maps show that Great St. Anne's Lane is the same place as that known as St. Ann's Street in modern times. Mr. Smith, in his account of St. John's Parish, quotes Seymour's mention, in 1735, of "Great St. Anne's Lane, a pretty, handsome, well-built and inhabited place."

The statement that Purcell died in a house on the West side of Dean's Yard seems to have been founded on the notice in the third edition of the "Lessons for the Harpsichord," published in 1696 by the widow, that it was "to be sold at her house in Great Dean's Yard, Westminster." Mrs. Purcell does not appear on the rate books for 1696 or 1697 for any house in Great Dean's Yard (which is partly in the parish of St. Margaret's and partly in the Close), nor do the Abbey Minutes refer to the granting of any house to her in the Close (these minutes, however, only seem to make reference to houses that were leased). Great Dean's Yard is shown on an old large scale map in the British Museum, drawn in the first half of the eighteenth century, as a much smaller space than now, the southern part being covered with buildings.

We have seen that Purcell rented a house in Marsham Street all through the fatal year of 1695, paying rates up to Easter, 1696—i.e., four months after his death. It is very possible that the bereaved widow, with her young children, went to lodge or stay with some friend in one of the houses. And for the purpose of selling the publications which Mrs. Purcell soon put forth, Dean's Yard would be a very convenient and likely place to which to invite admirers of the dead genius. But there is absolutely no proof that Purcell had a house or lived in Dean's Yard. There is, it seems to me, a certainty he did not die there.

* Stow tells us: "The Lady Margaret, mother to King Henry VII., erected an Almes-House for poor women, which is now turned into lodgings for the singing men of the Colledge. The place wherein the Chappell and Almes-House standeth, was called the Eleemosynary, or Almonry."

† I am told on good authority that 16s. represents an assessment of £30 or £40 annual value, the rent of a good house in those days. Dr. Blow paid 12s. in 1684.

‡ Purcell's name is the third in the ratepayers' list from the Tufston Street end.

Since the above was written, I have come upon some interesting entries concerning Purcell and his residence in the Chapter Books. These consist of a number of receipts in Purcell's own hand for payments made to him by the Treasurer of the Dean and Chapter "in lieu of a house." A fac-simile of one of these entries will be found on the opposite page.

The book containing these receipts was not used after 1683, but, by the aid of Mr. Scott, of the British Museum, who is arranging the Abbey records, I have come across a similar receipt for January, 1692, signed by Purcell.

Still more interesting is it to be able to state that we have found in the Audit made in June and August, 1695, the year of Purcell's death, the following entry:—"To Mr. Purcell his acc^t for a house for half a y^r. due Lady Day, £04 - 00 - 0." Surely this proves he had no official residence in Dean's Yard? I may add that the same allowance of £2 a quarter "in lieu of a house" was paid to my predecessors, Mr. Greatorex and Mr. Turle. When a house in the Cloisters was found for the latter, in 1841, the payment ceased. No doubt it had continued to be paid to all the organists since Purcell.

PORTRAITS OF PURCELL.

By WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

THE portrait here engraved, from an oil painting attributed to Sir Godfrey Kneller, in the possession of Mr. Alfred Littleton, has a very interesting history. It was given by Purcell to his friend John Church, who was at the time a Lay-Vicar of Westminster Abbey, and, after Purcell's death, a gentleman of the Chapels Royal. From John Church it descended, in 1741, to his eldest son, the Rev. John Church, Rector of Boxford, Suffolk. The latter died in 1785, in the city of Norwich, and the painting then became the property of his daughter, Mrs. Strutt, who gave it to Joah Bates, the eminent Conductor of the Handel Commemoration held in Westminster Abbey in 1784, and also of the "Ancient Concerts," from whose descendants it was purchased by Mr. Alfred Littleton. Mr. Bates was on a visit to Mrs. Strutt, at her country house, when he observed this portrait of Purcell "hanging in an obscure, solitary apartment, where it seemed to be completely neglected and undervalued. On his suggesting that it was a pity so interesting a portrait should not be placed where it would be more generally seen by musical persons," Mrs. Strutt presented it to him, remarking that her father used to declare that "it was a striking likeness." There is in the British Museum a drawing of Purcell, which may have been Kneller's original sketch for the oil painting. This drawing once belonged to Dr. Burney, the music historian, and afterwards to Bartleman, the great bass singer. Engravings from the drawing have been made by Holloway and others, which are now scarce, and the original oil painting was copied by Edward Novello, from which reproduction W. Humphreys engraved the print published in Novello's collection of Purcell's sacred music.

The portrait, painted in oils by Closterman, adorns the rooms of the "Royal Society of Musicians," who kindly permitted a photograph to be taken for insertion here. This picture was probably painted in 1693 or 1694, and was for many years in possession of Purcell's son Edward, at whose death it passed into the hands of his son Edward Henry, from whom it was purchased by Dr. William Boyce; the latter died in 1779, and the painting was then purchased by Redmond Simpson, a member of the Royal Society of Musicians. Mr. Simpson presented this portrait of Purcell, together with others of Corelli, Handel, and Geminiani to the "Directors of the Antient Concerts in Tottenham St.," to be held by them "so long as the said Concerts shall continue, upon condition that when the said 'Antient Concerts' shall break up, the portraits are to be given and delivered over to the Royal Society of Musicians, and by them to be kept for ever after. In witness and testimony whereof the said Redmond Simpson and Sir Watkin William Wynn have hereto set their hands this 25th day of April, 1785." The "Antient Concerts" did "break up" in 1848, and then the pictures passed to their present home. Purcell's son, and also his pupil, Henry Needler, declared the portrait was extremely like Purcell, and that during the latter years of his life he had rapidly changed in appearance in consequence of his bad health. It may be noted that this portrait was copied and engraved by Zobel some years since for private circulation.

There exists an interesting engraved portrait of Purcell, published by himself in 1683, with the lines beneath, "Vera Effigies Henrici Purcell. Ætat: Suae 24," and also his armorial bearings. This print formed a part of his "Sonatas of three parts," a work which has become very rare, and the portrait still rarer. There is also another engraving which is found in the "Orpheus Britannicus," published in 1698. It was also sold separately by Henry Playford, the publisher, for sixpence. The print bears the names of Closterman as designer and White as engraver, and has the engraved lines, "Henricus Purcell. Ætat: Suae 37," with the date 1695. It is said that Sir Christopher Wren took a cast of Purcell's face after death for the Dean of Westminster, Sir John Dolben, from which a bust was made, and that Closterman made his drawing from the bust. Dulwich College, down to the year 1794, possessed a portrait of Purcell; in that year it was copied by Harding and engraved. Unhappily the interesting and valuable original has disappeared, no one knows when or how.

The engraving of Purcell in Hawkins's "History of Music," it is said, was taken from an oil painting which once hung outside the "Purcell's Head," a tavern which stood in Wych Street, Strand, in immediate proximity to the theatres; it was purchased by Sir John Hawkins, who described it as representing the composer "with a brown full-bottomed wig, and a green night gown, finely executed."

A considerable number of engravings of Purcell have been published at various times, both in London and Paris, but they are merely reproductions, more or less faithful, of the paintings already described.

PURCELL AND DR. ARNE.

PURCELL, like all men of genius, had his detractors, and among these, apparently, must be counted Dr. Arne. In the "Kurtz" collection of autograph letters in the British Museum there is one written by Mr. Vincent Novello to Mr. Josiah French, of Windsor. This gentleman, for many years Lay Clerk of St. George's Chapel, was well-known as a collector of autographs, paintings, prints, &c. He had many friends of note in the world of art and music. He died suddenly in 1850 and his collections were sold by auction. The letter bears the date, May 10, 1847, and runs thus:—

"Dear Sir,

"I feel particularly gratified by your obliging politeness in sending me a copy of Dr. Arne's letter relative to some of the compositions of Purcell; and I have likewise to offer you my best acknowledgment for your liberal permission to publish it, in case I should be desirous of doing so.

"But before I avail myself of your friendly offer by making any public use of so extraordinary a letter, which compromises the modest self-appreciation, as well as the good taste and sound judgment in musical composition of Dr. Arne, in so strange and unfavourable a manner, it will be necessary for me to have it in my power to convince the public, who may entertain any doubt upon the subject, that the original letter is really a genuine and authentic document, and in the handwriting of Dr. Arne himself.

"It is very strange that there is neither date nor address attached to this extremely odd epistle.

"Will you, therefore, be so obliging as to favour me with the particulars of its sale to you as a genuine Autograph;—its former history, if it can be traced back into the possession of Garrick, to whom it is addressed—and the other circumstances forming the ground on which you are yourself convinced of the authenticity of the very curious and singular letter alluded to? and pray do not feel hurt with me for my caution, arising from my anxious wish to do justice both to the memory of Henry Purcell and Dr. Arne.

"In the meantime, with a repetition of my thanks for the copy which you have so politely forwarded to me, believe me to remain,

"Dear Sir,

"Your much obliged and obed^t

"VINCENT NOVELLO."

It would be interesting to know what has become of this "very curious and singular," and, we may add, ancient letter. It is scarcely likely that it has been destroyed.

In a letter dated September 3, 1775, written by Dr. Arne to David Garrick, there is, by the way, a brief reference to Purcell (see "The Private Correspondence of David Garrick," Vol. ii. p. 85). Arne says:—

"Champlness's songs, the chorus in the first scene of Mr. Vernon's 'Come, if you dare,' and several other things that employed my utmost efforts, were laid aside in favour of Purcell's music, which (though excellent in its kind) was cathedral, and not to the taste of a modern theatrical audience."

The image shows a facsimile of an autograph page of Purcell's "Yorkshire Feast." The page features ten staves of handwritten musical notation in G major (one sharp) and 3/4 time. The notation is in a cursive, handwritten style. The lyrics are written below the staves, with some words appearing on multiple staves. The lyrics are: "chorus divine let music Joyn in a chorus divine", "let music Joyn in a chorus divine", "chorus let music Joyn in a chorus divine", "Joyn in a chorus in a chorus divine", and "vine in a chony achorus divine". The page is signed "Purcell" at the bottom right.

FAC-SIMILE OF AUTOGRAPH PAGE OF PURCELL'S "YORKSHIRE FEAST."

(By permission of Mr. W. H. CUMMINGS.)

It is impossible to allow the issue of the fiftieth of Messrs. Novello's Music Primers to pass by without a word of comment. That the series has proved of genuine value to students and teachers is acknowledged on all sides. But no further proof of this is required than the straightforward statement, on the title-page of each Primer, of the number of thousands sold. The old custom of calling every reprint an "Edition" is capable of causing much misunderstanding, and the sooner it is abolished the better. The educational ground covered by this series is very wide. Mr. Francesco Berger's "First Steps at the Pianoforte" might almost be described as a "nursery companion"; the veteran and accomplished teacher, Mr. Ernst Pauer, has laid down the soundest principles and given the most valuable advice in his "Pianoforte Primer" (which had the honour of being No. 1 of the series), whilst Mr. Franklin Taylor is ready to carry pupils onward through "Double Scales." Now that the publishers have enlarged the scope of their original design by introducing works of a higher aim, we hope that more advanced exercises and pieces of graduated difficulty will appear in the future. The other instrumental Primers—the "Organ," "Harmonium," "Violin," "Violoncello," "Double-Bass," "Cornet"—form an important group. Good provision has been made for young organists. After the Organ Primer follows "Pedal Technique" (No. 47), "Albrechtsberger's Trios" (No. 48), and for those who wish to master the art of playing from a figured bass we find Dr. Dunstan's admirable "Basses and Melodies." Vocal music of almost every kind can be studied in this series, commencing with Mr. Randegger's "Singing" for soloists, collections for singing-classes of "Two-part Exercises" (No. 23), "Three-part Vocal Exercises" (No. 49), "Solfeggi," in one or two parts (No. 26); "The Art of Training Choirboys," from the pen of the organist of St. Paul's; and, lastly, we have before us a complete and graduated course of "Vocalisation for Choral Societies" (No. 50), of which it is safe to prophesy that it will impart new life into many choral societies where interest and attendance have shown signs of flagging. The idea of getting a genuine singing lesson before studying the work on hand will prove a tempting bait to waverers. Dr. Bridge's "Musical Gestures" occupies a unique position amongst the Primers devoted to vocal education. The theoretical series of Primers is perhaps one of the most comprehensive in the whole issue: "Harmony," "Counterpoint," "Fugue," "500 Fugue Subjects and Answers," "Double Counterpoint," "Basses and Melodies," and "Examples of Strict Counterpoint" constitute what might be described as a full armament for the genuine student, whilst "Composition," "Instrumentation," "Transposition," and many others supply wants daily felt. Dr. Parry's "Summary of Musical History," though it does not and could not present much that is new, is invaluable, on account of the admirable skill with which facts have been brought together and the literary interest he has succeeded in throwing into what would otherwise be dry and tedious. The "History of Musical Ornamentation," which Mr. Dannreuther has now completed, is certainly one of the most important and useful books published during the last half-century. Its value has been fully recognised by many leading foreign journals, as well as by every thoughtful reader in this country. It clears up, by historical research, those troublesome doubts and difficulties which hung around grace notes and ornaments. Many more valuable works in this series might, and perhaps ought to be named; but we have said enough to show that there is no falling off in the quality of the Primers, and if there are gaps which we should like to see filled up, we cannot blame the editors for holding back until they find exactly the right man for the subject, and we also know that the man who possesses the greatest ability in any branch has generally the least leisure at his disposal for the cultivation of its literary side.

THE success which attended Mr. Newman's bold but praiseworthy experiment at the recent Promenade Concerts at the Queen's Hall, of devoting an evening to new and unknown works, is suggestive of further advance being made in this direction, with advantage both to composers and audiences. If there be not many fine works reposing in oblivion in composers' desks and on publishers' shelves, there can be little doubt but that there are many excellent pieces of music which at times might well replace some which are too often heard in our concert-rooms. At present concert-givers scarcely seem to realise the importance of the introduction of new music, and apparently regard it as detrimental to the pecuniary success of the concert. As a matter of fact, however, the attractive power of a programme nearly always depends on the announcement of one or two favourite works, and the inclusion of a novelty instead of some hackneyed excerpt put in to fill up the programme would, far from diminishing the receipts, impart an interest to the performance which, in some cases, might even advantageously affect the treasury. At any rate, the support of the "cousins and the aunts" might be expected, and now and again the entrepreneur might be able to claim the merit of having "discovered" a genius, and that without having risked so much as the price of a single stall. Moreover, a novelty is an unflinching attraction to the critic, the beloved of all concert-givers. Any form of payment for the introduction in such manner should, however, be sternly put down. The composer who seeks to obtain the public ear by a golden key is acting traitorously to his fellow artists and to his art, for the inevitable result will, in the long run, be the presentation of the unworthy and the debasement of taste. The success of concerts, whose avowed attraction is the performance of that which is unknown, will depend firstly on the amount of the public craving for "the new thing," the speculative charms of which Londoners, like the Athenians of old, are presumably beginning to seek; and, secondly, on the average merit of the works produced. Should these prove persistently uninteresting and mediocre, the title of "novelty" will quickly become synonymous with avoidance. Those, therefore, who undertake such performances will have a delicate and responsible task. To judge of the merit of music from the silent score is only possible to the experienced musician, and to ask an audience to listen to the meanderings of undigested ideas will be alike detrimental to the interests of young writers and to the enterprise. Nor will the responsibility end here, for it is obvious that the "novelty" concert, if sagaciously and artistically managed, may be made a valuable means for the encouragement of composers, and conducive to the progress of music in England.

IN Mr. J. S. Shedlock's recently published book, "The Pianoforte Sonata," a chapter is devoted to Johann Kuhnau, in which attention is called to the Bible Stories musically illustrated in six Sonatas by that composer. There is an interesting, though brief reference to them in Spitta's "Life of J. S. Bach"; but Mr. Shedlock describes all six in greater detail. Of these Sonatas Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. are about to publish the first two: "David and Goliath" and "David curing Saul by means of music," and these, it seems, have never been reprinted since they were first published by Kuhnau, at Leipzig, in the year 1700. They form early and curious specimens of programme music, and will excite something more than mere antiquarian interest. Johann Kuhnau was the immediate and not unworthy predecessor of Handel and Bach. In the work mentioned above, reference is also made to the Italian composer, Bernardo Pasquini, another predecessor of Handel and Bach; also to Gaetano Grieco, the teacher of Domenico Scarlatti. Of the former, Messrs. Novello and Co. are about to publish some of his finest harpsichord pieces, also some by the latter. Here again it will be found that the old age and rarity of the music are not its sole recommendations. The skill and grace of Grieco's music must be acknowledged, and, if we mistake not, traces of genius will be recognised in it. Bernardo Pasquini is undoubtedly a great name which has unjustly fallen into oblivion. In connection with Pasquini, a volume containing Variations for harpsichord, by Frescobaldi and Froberger, and a piece by Caspar Kerl will also be published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. The Variations will serve to show how the two predecessors of Pasquini, by whom he was influenced, treated the variation form in which Pasquini himself especially delighted. The Kerl "Kuku" bears special relation to a "Cuckoo" piece by Pasquini. These various publications will be edited by Mr. J. S. Shedlock, and in each there will be a preface giving details respecting autographs and the music generally.

THE appearance of a musical article in the Edinburgh Review is of sufficiently rare occurrence to demand attention. Unfortunately, though well turned out, so far as mere literary workmanship is concerned, the article is disfigured by dogmatism, prejudice, and general cantankerousness to a quite extraordinary degree. The subject of the reviewer's remarks is recent literary musical criticism, and the great bulk of the article is made up of copious extracts from, or abstracts of, the chapters of Dr. Parry's "Art of Music." Of that work he speaks in the main with due respect and even sympathy, but falls foul of the author for his championship of Brahms and Wagner, and goes out of his way to indulge in some absurd depreciation of the genius of Schubert. Now all we have got to say is this, that a musical critic who cannot appreciate Brahms, Wagner, or Schubert has no business whatever to be "pontifying" in the pages of a leading review. It is simply an absurd anachronism which brings discredit on the publication in question, and we sincerely trust that the new editor, whoever he may be, will exercise greater discretion in the choice of his musical contributors. Finally, however true in its essence the reviewer's reference to the vagaries of certain musical critics attached to the London press may be, it is in the worst taste, while the statement as to the dislodging of one critic by another is, to put it mildly, highly inaccurate. The more we reflect on this matter, the more we are convinced of the advisability, except under the grossest provocation, of abstaining in any way from advertising the vagaries in question. If a critic is a thoroughly bad critic, he may be safely left to break his own neck, and he is sure to do it in the long run.

It is a pity that so readable and often interesting a paper as the Ménestrel is not better served in the matter of foreign intelligence. The London correspondence in particular is a marvel of inexactitude. Take, for example, the allusions to the Leeds Festival. Mr. Somervell's "Forsaken Merman" became, first of all, "Mr. Loverwell's 'Forsaken Alderman'" and, subsequently, when they got the name of the composer right, the title of his cantata was translated "Le Pêcheur abandonné"! With regard to the other novelties, the London correspondent of the Ménestrel gives prominence to M. Massenet's "Visions," which he describes as a "symphonic poem of considerable difficulty in execution, to which the orchestra failed to render sufficient justice." We should greatly like to know whether the writer was present at the performance. Of the English opera season at Covent Garden he says that it "takes place every year at a fixed date." Finally, we encounter the following curious announcement: "The organisers of the next Leeds Festival, which will take place in the course of 1896 [sic], have just requested our confrère, Adolphe Julien, the distinguished critic-composer, to contribute to their programme. M. Julien proposes to send them his charming chorus 'Les Prairies.' We shall see in due course what the Atheneum [sic], the appointed arbiter of these great musical tournaments, thinks of it. The charm of this truly original composition of our compatriot no doubt will not be lost on that journal. In any case, we owe our thanks to the organisers of the Festival for the delicate homage which they have rendered to French musical criticism in the person of one of its most authoritative representatives." No doubt there is some subtle irony in the foregoing paragraph, but it is somewhat difficult to fathom its depth.

THE Memorial Service in honour of Purcell, at Westminster Abbey, on the 21st inst., will be of the nature of a solemn function. The music will commence with a "double voluntary" for organ; then follows Purcell's Te Deum; the Anthem for Ascension Day, "O all ye people, clap your hands"; Anthem for six voices, chorus, and orchestra, "Praise the Lord, O my soul"; Anthem for five voices, "Remember not, Lord, our offences" (conducted by Sir John Stainer); Anthem for four voices, chorus, and orchestra, "O sing unto the Lord a new song." At this point there will be a short address by the Dean, then the offertory for the Purcell Memorial will be collected, during which the Hymn "O Thou to Whom all creatures bow" will be sung by the choir and congregation to Purcell's tune "Burford." The Dean of Westminster will then proceed to Purcell's grave, on which he will place a wreath, during which time an Elegy, specially composed by Mr. E. Silas on themes by Purcell, will be played—by the way, the new electric organ will be used in this number. Then will follow, most appropriately, Purcell's setting of the words "Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of our hearts," from the Burial Service (conducted by Sir Arthur Sullivan)—this, it will be remembered, was sung at Purcell's own funeral. After this will come the Anthem "O give thanks," and finally the Anthem for five voices, chorus, strings, and organ, "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem." Purcell's Toccata in A will be the concluding voluntary. With the two exceptions named, the music will be conducted throughout by Professor Bridge.

MISTAKES will occur in the best regulated Dictionaries, and editors cannot reasonably complain when they are pointed out. Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," a work in the making of which many hands were concerned, may be charged with sins of commission and omission, but fault-finders should be excessively careful. We much regret that in the article "Sir Henry R. Bishop," which appeared in our last issue, accusations were made which proved unfounded. Various operas are mentioned with the additional information that they are "not in Grove." In some instances the writer is correct, but in others, not. "The Slave," "Montoni," "Burgomaster of Zaardam," and "Vespers" are all named in the Supplement; also "Love's Labour Lost" and "Fortunate Isles" between 1836 and 1841, of which period it is said that there are no items in Grove. Further, the writer of the article "Bishop" in Grove's Dictionary states that he has no intention of giving a complete list of Bishop's works—a disclaimer which would weigh against the oft-repeated "not in Grove," even if the charge of omission were in every case justifiable.

THE latest and by no means the least significant commentary on the confident declaration of a writer in the Nineteenth Century a few years ago that the "Wagner Bubble" was burst, comes from Paris. It is stated in the most authoritative way that M. Charles Lamoureux, the famous Conductor and Wagnerian propagandist, is about to build a new theatre on the model of that at Bayreuth. The plans are all decided upon, and it is expected that the theatre will be opened in 1898 with a performance of the "Ring," to be given without "cuts." Certainly the conquest of France by Wagner, if somewhat tardy, is now complete. No more conspicuous proof of the dominating force of his genius could be found than such a victory, when the sensitive patriotism of the French and the aggressive Teutonism of Wagner are taken into account.

LOVERS of music, and more especially worshippers of Beethoven, will welcome the announcement that Messrs. Novello & Co. will shortly publish the book on Beethoven's Symphonies upon which Sir George Grove has been engaged for some time past. It may be confidently asserted that his masterly and interesting analyses, written for the Richter and the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts, have increased the enjoyment of thousands in these symphonies, as well as having greatly contributed to their present widespread appreciation in England. When it is said that these analyses may be regarded but as the preliminary sketches for the forthcoming volume, some idea may be gained of the value of Sir George Grove's latest effort in the cause of the art he has loved so long and served so well.

As a memorial to Henry Purcell, who was organist of Westminster Abbey for fifteen years, and who lies almost under the "Great Organ," nothing could be more appropriate than to erect the two beautiful cases designed by Mr. Pearson, R.A., the sketches for which we are permitted to reproduce in our present number. The Abbey organ was rebuilt in 1884, but owing to lack of funds it was found impossible to add the cases. The idea has been warmly taken up by the Purcell Society and others, and already nearly one-half of the £2,000 required has been promised. It is to be hoped that the remainder of the money will be provided by the forthcoming Bi-centenary Commemoration Festival.

WITH great regret we record the death of Sir Charles Hallé, which took place at the moment of going to press. Further particulars will be found in another column.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

I AM indebted to Mr. Henry Knight for the following generous tribute to the memory of Thérèse Tietjens:

Thine was the voice, poured forth in purest tone,
That o'er this sordid world our souls could raise;
Thine was the majesty—for thou alone
Could'st hold us spellbound in those long past days.
Alas! alas! the years have quickly sped,
By thy successors' gifts the world is sway'd,
But forgotten, 'mid the honour'd dead,
Rest calmly on, thy virtues cannot fade.

I AM indebted to a correspondent for knowledge of an advertisement in which a certain Vicar makes known an exceedingly complicated want. Nero is credited with having wished that the people of Rome had but one neck, so he might behead them all at a blow. On the same principle this reverend advertiser desires to find several servants in one body. He wants a lady organist, a thorough artist, one who can accompany Gregorian music and officiate at "Weekly High Mass"—whatever that may be in the Church of England. He wants, also, a lady housekeeper, and a plain cook, intimating, further, a preference for an organist who has passed musical examinations, and can send a photograph. In return for the cultured organist, the lady housekeeper, and the plain cook he is willing to pay the one into whose unity these three have been rolled, the annual sum of £30, with, as he expresses it, "all found." Generous man!

THE printer's boy has had a look in at the Daily Chronicle office, and succeeded in making the careful and excellent musical critic of that journal say: "Mr. Bispham, who sang Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, obtained careful rendering from the band." This was an easy operation, performed simply by cutting off the tail of a sentence and joining what remained to the head of the next. But it was a successful stroke of the ink-stained Puck, and must have given him great satisfaction. Crossing the road to the Daily Telegraph, he caused that paper's correspondent at Leeds to speak of a "brass" clarinet, and, when at Gloucester, to state that the Mayor of the Western city has a special "staff" (instead of "stall") in the Cathedral, as though he were a beadle.

AN "experienced teacher" in Islington announces through the local Gazette that she is willing to give pianoforte lessons at the following rate: one lesson, 6d.; two lessons, 9d.; three lessons, 1s. We shall see advertisements even more astonishing before long if our musical academies go on imparting "a little learning" to anybody who can pay for it and hopes to live on it.

THE Vicar referred to above has a promising rival in an Irish storekeeper, who is anxious to discover in one person the qualifications of a music teacher and a shop assistant. This is how he puts it: "Young Lady (Protestant) wanted, to teach music and assist at drapery and grocery business, country; previous business experience not necessary; small salary." Salary so small that the advertiser is ashamed to mention it. There is a good point in the case. Should one of the unhappy girls now trying to live on pianoforte lessons at 3d. each be driven to accept the Irish offer, she will, at any rate, learn a better business.

DISTANT Cornwall will not allow the Purcell bi-centenary to pass without notice, and it is to its town of Redruth that the county owes the credit of a happy procedure in the matter. Redruth is a great centre of Methodism, and has two large chapels, each able to accommodate some 2,000 persons, and each equipped with a choir in proportion. Coming in sight of the bi-centenary, it occurred to Mr. J. Leese, organist of Wesley Chapel, to join musical forces with the United Methodists, and get up a Purcell celebration. The idea took with all concerned, and at the proper time the following programme will be gone through in Wesley Chapel:—Devotional exercises; Address by Rev. B. C. Spencer on "The Life and Times of Purcell"; Organ Voluntary in D minor; Anthem, "Rejoice in the Lord alway"; Trio for organ and violins; Anthem, "Thou knowest, Lord"; Tenor solo, "O Lord, rebuke me not"; Organ solo, Chaconne in F; Anthem, "O all ye people"; Trio for organ and violins, "The Golden Sonata"; Anthem, "O sing unto the Lord." Each piece to be introduced by appropriate remarks. Organist, Mr. Leese; conductor, Mr. M. Clemens (organist, United Methodist Church); leading violin, Mr. H. Pearce. Well done, Redruth! A happy issue to the excellent scheme.

THE guarantors of the Bristol Festival are to be congratulated upon their perseverance. Notwithstanding that the city is, in musical matters, divided against itself, and that each meeting ends in serious loss, they have just resolved to try again. That is the spirit which conquers, and victory may result in this case, despite untoward experiences. It is good to hear that the Festival of 1896 will be entered upon with a clear balance-sheet, the expenses of training, &c., incurred between celebration and celebration having been met by an annual subscription. It seems hopeless to expect unity among Bristol music-lovers, but we may at least look for a turn in the tide of misfortune which has hitherto carried the Festival towards extinction.

AMATEURS being just now ready to hear anything concerning Purcell, I take this opportunity of congratulating all who love the old English master upon the fact that the Purcell Society has no fewer than eight works in course of preparation. These are the Harpsichord and Organ Music, respectively edited by Mr. Barclay Squire and Dr. Hopkins; "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day" (1692), Mr. Fuller Maitland, editor; Sacred Music, Vol. I. (Mr. H. E. Wooldridge); "Dioclesian" (Dr. J. F. Bridge); "Indian Queen" (Mr. W. H. Cummings); three "Odes on St. Cecilia's Day" (Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright); Sonatas in Four Parts (Dr. Stanford); Music in the "Libertine" and "Edipus" (Dr. Alan Gray). Excellent!

I HAVE before me the question, "Is Stockport musical?" Not knowing Stockport I cannot answer for it, but there seem to be indications which suggest a negative. When Frederick Dawson visited the place he played to empty benches, while a Concert given by Sir Charles and Lady Hallé proved a financial failure. "But," says a Manchester paper, "a townsman 'plays' an instrument forty hours and he is elevated to the rank of a demi-god, escorted through the streets by a brass band, and the hall is packed." From this it appears that music is nothing in Stockport save when connected with athleticism.

MANCHESTER is a curious place for a holiday, but it was chosen by the Printer's Boy, who varied his amusement there by gaining access to the office of the South Manchester Chronicle and working havoc with the report of a concert at Chorlton. In fine and exuberant "form," he made it appear that "a lady played orchestra accompaniment on a second piano which (the piano, I suppose) was a brilliant piece of playing"; that another artist performed Mozart's "Allegro molo," and that two others contributed "a pianoforte duet." He further caused it to be stated that a singer was happy in a song called "The Gauntlet," and that Mendelssohn's Wedding March is an "instrumental quartette."

SOME of the German papers seem to be extremely annoyed because Dr. Richter has resolved to engage a few members of his London orchestra for Bayreuth next year, and also because Frau Wagner has chosen Miss Brema and Miss Macintyre for leading parts in "Der Ring des Nibelungen." Of course. Vis-à-vis with England, German musicians believe in all take and no give, the idea of reciprocity being unknown to them. For this, however, they are scarcely to be blamed, seeing the measure in which, through long years, Englishmen have regarded them with awe and humility. But they might allow a few Britishers at a Festival which the German public have now abandoned to strangers and foreigners.

I DO good service by calling attention to some remarks which have recently appeared in the Musical Courier. The correspondent of that paper at the Worcester (Mass.) Festival asks: "How often have you heard an artistic performance of 'The Messiah'? Did you ever hear one of the Allegro choruses in that much abused and almost always misunderstood work taken at anywhere near the pace undoubtedly thought of by Handel? How often do you hear the opera airs that relieve the choruses in 'The Messiah' sung in the manner of the time when they were written?" We may differ about tempi and "opera airs," but the questions of the critic are pertinent, inasmuch as we never hear an artistic performance of Handel's masterpiece—artistic, that is to say, in the sense of being carefully prepared and animated by an intelligent and coherent purpose. "The Messiah" is so left to chance that when, at Leeds recently, Sir Arthur Sullivan called a rehearsal of the work, he caused the greatest astonishment and some grumbling.

IN the same article I find other suggestive remarks. "Why is it that nine singers out of ten maunder and dawdle in recitative, accent unimportant words, shun the colloquial style? A soprano delivers the statement of fact, 'And the witnesses laid down their clothes,' as though she were telling the story of Poland. A contralto will sob and sigh as she informs the audience that Saul journeyed with companions toward Damascus. A tenor will whine out 'And when his eyes were opened.'" These remarks are, of course, an exaggeration, but it is a fact that very few of our oratorio singers know how properly to treat recitative—a defect arising from their want of dramatic training, if not inherent, as it often is. When attending the Handel Festival at Mainz not long ago, I was struck with the superiority of the German artists in this matter. As vocalists they were inferior to our own singers, but they made the Handelian recitatives instinct with force and vitality. We have much to learn from them.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THERE is a sense of coldly furnishing tables with the baked meats of yesterday when sitting down to describe an event which happened so long ago as the first week in October. This is the penalty of living at such a rapid rate. So swiftly flows the stream of existence in our day that we shall soon see panting Time toil after it in vain. However, my task has to be done with what heartiness is possible under the circumstances.

I shall not occupy space with a long array of names and figures. Musical readers have seen these at length in the columns of newspapers, and know the strength of band and chorus, the quality of the principal singers, and so on. They do not need telling that Sir Arthur Sullivan conducted the Festival; that Mr. Frye Parker, for the first time, "led" the band, or that Mr. Alderman Fred. R. Spark was again the personification of a model secretary. It is equally unnecessary to add that the Prince of Wales attended three performances, talked pleasantly to the chorus about their merits, and did all in the power of a tactful man to make amends for what he could not help—namely, the bestowal upon himself of attention which should have been given to the music. All these matters may now be passed over the sooner to reach others of more importance.

Wednesday morning, the 2nd ult. "The Messiah" opened the Festival, and found itself in a novel position, inasmuch as, on such occasions, it is generally a closing work. But the old oratorio had most reason for surprise when seeing itself in the programme at all. Twelve years had passed since its last performance; this neglect being due to a feeling that the public, with many ordinary opportunities of hearing the familiar music, would prefer something else at the Festival. How far this impression was correct appeared when demands for places at the revival of "The Messiah" poured in to an embarrassing extent, at a time, be it noted, when it was not known that the Prince of Wales would attend. It is dangerous ever to assume that people do not want "The Messiah." Let Sir Arthur Sullivan receive due credit for a desire to perform the masterpiece worthily, and for having it rehearsed. "Rehearsed, with such performers!" Certainly, Sir or Madam. It is time to pay attention to an oratorio which has been for generations condemned to suffer from heedless assumptions that the music can, in some supernatural fashion, look after itself. So "The Messiah" was rehearsed at Leeds, and came out all the better for it. The work was "cut" in an unusual way, from which it did not come out all the better. I do not refer to omissions of some parts, atoned for by restoration of others, but to the lopping of ritornelli. Nothing was gained by this course, hardly even time. The performance can best be described by the word "magnificent." Such splendour of tone, both choral and orchestral; such precision of movement; such a noble and elevating ensemble, are very rarely met with, and great was the satisfaction resulting. The chorus at once set any question of pre-eminence at rest. A perfect body of highly-trained and sonorous voices, it struck me as the best I had ever heard, in this country or on the Continent. I doubt if its equal could be produced anywhere in the world. The names of the artists speak for the solo singing. They were Madame Albani, Miss Sarah Berry, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Norman Salmond, the last of whom was heartily welcomed, after illness and absence, by his fellow-countrymen.

Wednesday evening. The programme of the second Concert contained some familiar works: Overture to "Der Freischütz"; "Jupiter" Symphony; "First Walpurgis Night." Beyond general commendation of the very fine performance these things received I do not intend to go, since a novelty—Dr. Hubert Parry's "Invocation to Music"—demands all the space that can be spared. This Ode was expressly written both by poet (Mr. Robert Bridges) and composer, not only as provision for the Festival, but also in honour of Henry Purcell, to whom, however, the poem never directly refers, and with whom only one number is even obliquely connected. I do not complain of this. The fate of a pièce d'occasion is almost always to be that and nothing more. The occasion passes; the piece goes with it. Looking at Mr. Bridges' verse as a thing apart, one must admire many beautiful thoughts clothed in appropriate language. The poem reads well, and was, to all appearance, designed more for a place in its gifted author's collected works than specially as "words for music," the exigencies of which are, in various respects, ignored. But Dr. Parry is an expert in dealing with Odes, and has easily built around and into Mr. Bridges' "Invocation" a musical structure of very considerable beauty and charm. To the experienced eye it is obvious that he had to encounter considerable difficulties, but the result brings ample reward, and it is scarcely dangerous to prophesy that the work will enjoy no inconsiderable share of good fortune. As in all such cases, the division into choruses, soli, duets, and so on, is arbitrary, the composer being free to study musical effect without ulterior considerations. He has made good use of his liberty, especially for the securing of whatever effective contrasts came within the range of possibility. The general style of the music is that with which Dr. Parry has made us all familiar—one of great fullness and richness, wanting sometimes in the lighter graces of art, but never other than thoughtful, manly, deeply expressive, and moving. There is one section in the work—a Dirge for bass solo, chorus, and orchestra—in which these qualities are more than ever conspicuous. I look upon it as absolutely a masterpiece, whether regarded from a technical or emotional point of view. In this number the work touches its highest point; but there are others not far below it, while scattered about the Ode are ideas and passages which one might almost venture to call new. As the "Invocation" will be produced by the Royal Choral Society this season, an opportunity will soon arise for fuller consideration than is possible here. Enough that a deep impression was made upon those who could appreciate its merits, and that Dr. Parry conducted an excellent performance, with Miss Macintyre, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Watkin Mills as efficient soloists. The hall was crowded, and here let me say, to save time farther on, that this was the case at every Concert during the week. Difficulty lay in finding places for applicants, not applicants for places.

Thursday morning. This Concert need not detain us long. It opened with Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony and closed with Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," that opera being taken bodily into the Concert-room and there performed "in the manner of an oratorio." Even in cases which absolutely disregard the composer's intentions, sweeping condemnation should be avoided. Some operas can be played as oratorios without much loss; out of others, on a platform, the whole life seems to go. The "Flying Dutchman," in my opinion, is one of the second class. It is so completely a succession of pictures that, performed off the stage, it reminds one of "Hamlet" with the Prince omitted. That fact warrants one objection, and basis for another may be found in the unchallengeable truth that a great festival should produce nothing save in a state of the utmost attainable perfection. No question of expediency, as far as I can discover, ameliorates the position in this case. The committee may have thought it desirable to place Wagner's name in the programme. That I can understand; but the "Flying Dutchman" is a work not recognised as typical of the composer, who, in his later years, would probably only have said of it as of "Rienzi," "That sounds well yet!" The performance, with Miss Macintyre, Miss Mackenzie, Mr. Hirwen Jones, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Bispham, and Mr. Black as principal vocalists, had many and great merits. It was certainly an advantage to hear the choruses given by such a choir. They gained immensely, not only in breadth and grandeur of tone, but also in dramatic impressiveness. Hearing them, one seemed much nearer to the composer than before.

Thursday evening. Room was made at the fourth Concert for the first two out of the six cantatas which constitute Bach's "Christmas Oratorio." In this case the committee cannot be charged with producing fragments, inasmuch as each part of the work was intended to stand alone, and to be used independently of the remainder. The sections chosen on this occasion are, perhaps, more generally acceptable than any of the others. They illustrate the Nativity with a rare combination of learned head and simple, believing heart, while, as every one knows, the choruses, "Christians, be joyful," and "Glory to God," with the airs, "Prepare thyself, Zion," and "Slumber, beloved," are among the recognised best efforts of the great old master. The solos were entrusted to Miss Medora Henson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Lloyd (who had only four recitatives), and Mr. Norman Salmond. How impressively the chorales were sung need not be said. Following the sacred music came a group of selections, headed by an Orchestral Suite in D minor from the pen of Mr. Edward German. This had been written for the occasion and was conducted by the composer, who, as in the case of previous works belonging to the same class, had no difficulty in scoring a success. The new Suite includes four movements—a Prelude in the form and spirit of a first Allegro, a Valse Gracieuse, an Elegy, and a Saltarelle. It might thus pass for a Symphony with very little concession on the part of those who contend for the purity of form. All the movements show fertility of invention, great command of the orchestra, and an obvious desire to work through legitimate means rather than by anything approaching the sensational. The Valse had a most cordial reception, but that should not be taken as signifying superiority. Graceful melody was there, no doubt, but the audience loved the rhythm and nodded their heads to it delightedly. From an artistic point of view, honours were taken by the Prelude—one of the best movements of recent times. "Come, if you dare," was all of Purcell in the week's programme, and therefore a poor representation of the composer whose name is just now in all men's mouths. It was sung with spirit by Mr. Hirwen Jones, and followed by Chopin's Concerto in E minor (Mr. Sauer), with the "William Tell" Overture as a brilliant conclusion to the Concert.

Friday morning, Dvůřák's "Stabat Mater" began the third day's proceedings, the solos in the hands of Madame Albani, Miss Berry, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Judging by the eagerness of the audience, much was expected from the performance of this beautiful work, and, as far as I am aware, no disappointment followed. Some selections in the second part of the programme—Weber's Concertstück (Mr. Sauer), two short piano-forte solos, and the ballet music in Gounod's "Faust"—may be passed for the sake of a novelty—to wit, "The Forsaken Merman," a setting for soli, chorus, and orchestra of Matthew Arnold's poem, by Mr. A. Somervell. This composer appears to be an unusually sensible man. He is young, but not rash; he desires to take a position and is content to sap up to it instead of venturing all upon a rush. That is the way to succeed, and Mr. Somervell, I fancy, has only to persevere therein. The little poem chosen by him in the present case is an odd mixture of the natural and the supernatural, each of these elements acting upon the other in the direction of exaggerated incongruity; but the feeling throughout is very human, and there are situations of decided pathos. In a gentle, unassuming way, Mr. Somervell has risen to his argument, and given to our numberless choral societies a work which they will find very pleasing and useful. Many happy touches are met with as the piece goes on—touches due to a feeling for expressive melody, and to a fancy which, if not daring, has grace and truth in effect. That "The Forsaken Merman" is a small work upon which to employ the great resources of a Festival cannot be denied, but I see as much merit in it as in many others of far larger pretensions. Mr. Somervell conducted the performance successfully, and had reason to be satisfied with it. His soloist, representing the Merman, was Mr. Bispham.

Friday evening. The sixth Concert was devoted in part to Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," which itself was only given in part, the third section being omitted. Mutilation of works at these Festivals is not a procedure to be encouraged, and should be tolerated only when very strong reasons are obvious. Schumann's setting of the Peri's story was presented with splendid completeness; the soloists being Madame Albani, Miss Henson, Miss Mackenzie, Mr. Hirwen Jones, and Mr. Bispham, and the magnificent chorus working in its very best form. The points of genuine interest in the selection following were three: first, a new orchestral work, "Visions," by M. Massenet; second, Wesley's fine Psalm, "In exitu Israel"; third, the Overture to "Die Zauberflöte." Concerning "Visions," enough has been said elsewhere. There is no advantage in flogging a dead horse, but let it be said that foreign composers really should not send our Festivals the sweepings of their studios. The Psalm and Overture were nobly rendered.

Saturday morning. Some risky passages apart, the great Second Mass of Beethoven was impressively performed, the chorus, in particular, coming out of the difficulties in triumph. It was a tremendous effort at mastery of a work which, perhaps, will never entirely yield to human skill and energy. But if the conquest was not complete it proved highly honourable to all concerned, and should be considered, notwithstanding blemishes, as the proudest feather in the cap of the Festival. The soli were entrusted to Miss Henson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Black, who successfully discharged an arduous task. Schumann's Symphony in B flat and Mendelssohn's "As the hart pants" completed the programme.

Saturday evening. The Festival closed with the "Creation" (Part I) and the "Golden Legend," about which nothing need be said, while their efficient performance can be taken for granted. Enough that these works were a fitting end of four days' heavy labour and unquestionable success. The grand orchestra, the grander chorus, the leading vocalists, and the resourceful conductor, Sir Arthur Sullivan, all deserved well of musical England, and may, in the language of the schools, "go up one."

COVENT GARDEN OPERA.

So many speculators in what is known as grand opera have tried a "cheap" season in the autumn with unsatisfactory results, that Mr. E. C. Hedmondt must be regarded as a bold man in tempting fortune once more; but we trust he will meet with such reward as he deserves, and this, so far as can be gauged at present, should be considerable. The fact that he pins a goodly measure of his faith to "Wagner in English" is in his favour, for the Bayreuth master is at present on a pinnacle of popularity. It must be borne in mind, however, that the section of the public that love the highest forms of art requires everything to be done on the best scale, regardless of price, and it cannot be said that the opening performance of "Tannhäuser," on the 12th ult., was otherwise than mediocre. Mr. Hedmondt was pardonably nervous, and to this fact we may attribute his distressingly false intonation, though he acted with conspicuous force and intelligence. Miss Alice Esty was girlish, original, and vocally effective as Elizabeth, and Mr. David Bispham was really very fine as Wolfgram, singing the beautiful music with the utmost distinction. The orchestra, under Mr. Feld, was highly creditable, but the chorus and stage arrangements were not, and the mangling of Wagner's score was simply exasperating.

On the following Monday "Lohengrin" was given with somewhat better results, Mr. Hedmondt being in better voice, Miss Esty a charming Elsa, and Miss Olitzka, as usual, a powerful Ortrud. But the chorus, as before, was stolid and feeble.

Further improvement was shown on the 15th, in "Faust," and with words of hearty praise to Mr. Philip Brozel as Faust, Madame Fanny Moody as Margaret, Mr. Charles Manners as Mephistopheles, and Miss Olitzka as Siebel, we may pass to brief notice of the most important night of the season—the first performance of Wagner's "The Valkyrie" in English. The most devoted worshippers of the Bayreuth master may contend as long as they please that his great tetralogy "The Nibelung's Ring" should not be presented in sections, but inasmuch as the public is showing an increasing demand for them, managers have little choice in the matter. Let us hasten to add that a surprising degree of merit was exhibited on the occasion now under consideration, notwithstanding that the cast did not include a single name intimately associated with the advanced works of the Bayreuth master. Miss Susan Strong, from America, sang so well as Sieglinde that she has been engaged for Bayreuth next year, and Miss Lilian Tree, though a somewhat diminutive Brunnhilde, was also excellent, vocally speaking. Wotan, in the hands of Mr. David Bispham, was not the "prince of bores," as the character has sometimes been termed, but quite an impressive personage, and Mr. Hedmond sang well and acted finely as Siegmond. The orchestra, under Mr. Henschel, simply covered itself with glory. It is impossible to imagine Wagner's glorious orchestration more picturesquely interpreted.

Concerning "Carmen," on the following evening, it is only necessary to mention the very realistic presentation of the Gipsy by Miss Agnes Janson; and of the repetition of "Lohengrin," on the 18th, it will suffice to record the appearance of Mr. Edwin Wareham, a promising young singer, in the titular part, and the effective vocalisation of Madame Marie Duma as Elsa.

On the 19th the jubilee of the production of "Tannhäuser" (October 19, 1845, at Dresden) was celebrated, with Miss Macintyre as a most charming Elizabeth. Here for the present our record must end.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

THE first of the fortieth annual series of the Saturday Concerts was held on the 12th ult., the programme being remarkable for its variety and interest. In one respect it was of historic interest, at least to Mr. Manns, who had himself played the violin obligato to the Aria from Mozart's "Idomeneo," sung on this occasion by Mdle. Otta Brony, thirty-nine years and ten months previously! Many things have happened in the musical world since 1856, the year of Schumann's death, but Mr. Manns happily goes on with a perennial continuity reminding us of Tennyson's "Brook." On the score of their novelty, priority of attention is claimed by two unpretentious pieces for orchestra, from the pen of Mr. J. F. Barnett, now performed for the first time with considerable success. The "Liebeslied," with a flowing melody assigned to the violoncellos, is one of those genial but obvious compositions in which the unexpected never happens. Of very much greater attractiveness and merit is the dance movement entitled "Im alten styl"—why not "In the olden style"?—in which a piquant theme is subjected to treatment that is both graceful and ingenious. The harmonies in the Coda are hardly old-fashioned, but the general effect is excellent. Mr. Barnett was summoned to the platform and cordially applauded. Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," a work comparatively unfamiliar to Sydenham hearers, served to introduce that accomplished artist M. Achille Rivarde, whose beautiful tone, elegant phrasing, and finished technique combined to produce a very favourable impression on the audience. Lalo's work is so full of graceful sentiment and picturesque colour that we wonder it is not more often played. Few artists, however, are equipped with the qualities necessary for its adequate interpretation. But of M. Rivarde's claims to be included in the number there can be no question. His playing is marked by a fastidious purity of style and an absence of sentimentality rare in a French artist. His minor solo—Ernst's very tinselly de-rangement of Hungarian airs—supplied him with the opportunity for displaying his fine technique, his harmonics being wonderfully clean and true, but was otherwise of no artistic value. Mr. Manns secured a brilliant rendering of Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture, and, apart from a rather blurred rendering of the opening phrase, of Beethoven's C minor Symphony. Mdle. Otta Brony, besides contributing the Mozart Aria mentioned above, was heard in a pretty but rather trivial Lied by Hans Hartman, and Brahms's exquisite "Vergleichliches Ständchen," a singularly futile English version of which, with a misleading title, was printed in the book of words. Mdle. Brony sings conscientiously and with intelligence, but there is nothing about her voice or style which calls for more than moderate commendation. It may be noted here that one or two alterations have taken place in the band, the most striking being the retirement of Mr. Clinton, the well-known first clarinet player, who has been succeeded by Mr. Draper, an excellent young artist from the Royal College of Music.

The second Concert falling within a day of the fortieth anniversary of the inauguration of the series on October 20, 1855, a special programme was drawn up in honour of the occasion, and to emphasise Mr. Manns's continuous encouragement of native talent, the works chosen were, without exception, of home growth and, what is more, had in every instance been originally produced at these Concerts. The phrase "English school" used in the special notice prefixed to the programme book was, however, something of a misnomer, since, as has been pointed out, the only regular Englishman in the list was Hubert Parry, and he comes originally of a Welsh stock. Wales was also represented by a brand new Symphony from the pen of Mr. Walford Davies, and an uncommonly interesting work it proved to be, in spite of some tough and uncompromising passages. The Allegretto, however, is the most genial and poetical thing this clever young composer has yet written, and shows a delicate originality of rhythmical treatment of a very rare order. For the rest, Mr. Walford Davies is strenuous, with a sort of ascetic intellectuality which leads him to exercise perhaps too rigid a restraint on the emotional element. The Symphony was finely played, and created a most favourable impression. Mr. Frederick Dawson revived Dr. Parry's F sharp Pianoforte Concerto, first introduced by Mr. Dannreuther in 1880, a curious rather than attractive work, though marked by individuality and power in the solo part, which was finely played by the young Lancashire pianist. Four numbers from Sullivan's charming "Tempest" music, written in the composer's twentieth year, including Ariel's song, sung in a refined but colourless manner by Mrs. Trust; Sir Alexander Mackenzie's spirited Scottish Rhapsody in G; a pretty movement from Mr. Cowen's Suite "In the Olden time," and the ballad "There's a bower of roses," from Stanford's "Veiled Prophet," completed the programme. Excellent performances were given in every case with the exception of the Concerto, in which the accompaniments were played very roughly and perfunctorily. Mr. Manns, who conducted with his familiar zeal and ability, was very heartily received by a small audience.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

FAITHFUL as ever, the lovers of orchestral music in general, and of Beethoven and Wagner in particular, thronged St. James's Hall at the first of three autumnal Concerts, under the famous Viennese conductor, on Monday, the 21st ult. For the sake of accuracy it should be said at once that the two masters named did not fill up the entire programme, the most important feature being that remarkable work Tschaiakowsky's "Symphonie Pathétique," which it has been well said has brought the Russian composer more fame after his death than he enjoyed during his life. The noble work was so magnificently played that the dictionary would have to be ransacked for superlatives in order to do justice to the interpretation. The Richter orchestra has never been heard to greater advantage. Beethoven was represented by his glorious Overture "Leonora" (No. 3), and Wagner by the Overture to "Die Meistersinger" and the exquisite Good Friday music from "Parsifal." These were all grandly rendered, as was Brahms's genial "Academic Festival" Overture. Indeed, the whole Concert was one of the most artistically successful and thoroughly enjoyable that has ever been given in St. James's Hall.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

THE Promenade Concerts at the Queen's Hall were concluded on the 5th ult., when an enormous audience crowded every part of the spacious building from which the music could be heard. The steady increase in the attendances until, during the last fortnight of the series, to promenade in the hall itself became an impossibility, convincingly showed that the scheme had gained wide favour, and that these Concerts will in future be pleasurably anticipated by a large section of the public. Although the Leeds Festival called away many members of Mr. Henry Wood's orchestra, the excellence of the performances was well maintained, thanks in no small measure to the admirable playing of Mr. Arthur Payne, who replaced during this period Mr. Frye Parker as principal violinist. The most notable performance, in that it was the first of its kind and one that, mayhap, will mark the advent of an important departure in concerts, took place on the 2nd ult., when the evening was chiefly devoted to the production of unknown works, under the title of a "Novelty Night." The original productions comprised the Prelude to "Rosalind," an opera the libretto of which is based upon Shakespeare's play "As you like it," by Harold Vicars; and a Minuet from a Comedy Opera "Anne Hathaway," by Clarence Lucas, a Canadian composer, born in 1866. "First time of performance in England" was claimed for the Prelude to "Guntram," an opera completed last year by Richard Strauss; an "Andante Funèbre," by Johann S. Svendsen; "Boyard's March," by Halvorsen, a young Swedish composer; Prelude to "Mataswintha," a new opera by Xaver Scharwenka, now in rehearsal for production at Weimar; a "Marche Solennelle," by Tschaiowsky; and Massenet's Overture to Racine's tragedy "Phèdre," which, however, was played by the Philharmonic Society on March 4, 1880. Battison Haynes's orchestral version of Mackenzie's music to "Eugene Aram" was also given for the first time in London, the poem being recited with remarkable dramatic power by Mr. Charles Fry, who subsequently gave, with no less success, "The Bells," by Poe, with the fine illustrative music by Stanley Hawley. Concerning the new things brought forth, it must be admitted that very little search amongst young English writers would have discovered works of greater musical interest than some of the pieces which found a place in the programme. The Prelude to "Rosalind" made a favourable impression, chiefly owing to its clever scoring, and the "Boyard's March" is a vigorous and picturesque movement, instinct with Scandinavian characteristics; but Tschaiowsky's March was disappointing, much of it verging on the vulgar. The most important production was that of Scharwenka's Prelude to "Mataswintha," which bears the impress of earnest purpose and a master-hand. The most satisfactory feature of the evening, however, was the large and attentive audience, which will fully justify the experiment being repeated. As a whole, therefore, there is good cause for congratulation in the success of these Concerts, for, judiciously managed, it is evident that they can be made greatly instrumental in fostering a love for orchestral music and in cultivating a taste for the best in art. The spacious lobbies and many rooms afford abundant accommodation for those to whom the chief effect of music is apparently to give ideas that claim immediate utterance, and the music-lover can listen and enjoy, undisturbed by the sound of corks departing too hastily into space.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

THE season for these entertainments has commenced and soon they will be coming thick and fast. At present, however, we have only to notice two Recitals. The first was that of Madame Esperanza Kisch-Schorr, an English young lady notwithstanding her foreign name. This was given at the Steinway Hall on Tuesday, the 22nd ult., and was rendered interesting by the publication of a manifesto setting forth how Chopin's "Funeral" March should be played. When Rubinstein gave Recitals here he ignored the marks of expression given in most, if not all, editions, and commenced pianissimo, rose to a fortissimo, and then died away into silence. Madame Kisch-Schorr, fortified by the master's opinion personally given to her, maintains that this reading is correct, the idea being that a funeral cortège approaches, stops at the cemetery, and, after the beautiful words of the Burial Service, slowly passes away. She acts with authority in one respect, for Chopin was negligent in putting on paper how his music should be played, and the reading just explained is certainly very expressive. Though pardonably nervous, Madame Kisch-Schorr displayed a pure and delicate touch and a refined style, not only in the B flat minor Sonata, but in Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (No. 2), and pieces by Moszkowski, Rubinstein, and other composers.

The Misses Suro, who gave the first of three Recitals exclusively of music for two pianofortes, at St. James's Hall, on the 23rd ult., are two very praiseworthy young artists. They play together simply to perfection, the execution of the one, in touch, fluency, and expression, being the exact counterpart of the other. Their programme included Schumann's masterly Variations in B flat, an elaborate Fantasia by Max Bruch, Moscheles's "Hommage à Handel," and pieces by Raff, Reinecke, Brahms, Liszt, and Saint-Saëns. The entire performance was, in the highest sense, enjoyable.

THE PURCELL MEMORIAL PERFORMANCES.

It is proposed, with the approbation and under the patronage of the Queen, the Empress Frederick of Germany, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and the Princess Christian, to celebrate in Westminster Abbey, on the 21st inst., the 200th anniversary of the death of Henry Purcell, the chief glory of the English School of Music, and to raise an appropriate memorial in his honour. A complete list of the works to be performed and details of the ceremony on this occasion will be found in another column. For the memorial, it is proposed to provide suitable cases for the organ in Westminster Abbey, where Purcell was organist for fifteen years, and within the walls of which he lies buried. This proposal has received the full assent of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, and also of the Purcell Society. Mr. Pearson, R.A., has prepared a beautiful design, the cost of which is estimated at not less than £2,000 for the two divisions of the organ. Towards this amount Her Majesty the Queen, with her usual generosity, has subscribed, the Dean and Chapter have promised £500, and many other contributors, including the Worshipful Company of Musicians, have assisted. Donations may be sent to Mr. Thynne, Little Cloisters, Westminster Abbey, Treasurer of the Memorial Fund, or to the Precursor or the Organist of the Abbey. So far as the space will allow, contributors to the Memorial Fund will be entitled to a seat in the Nave of the Abbey at the Commemoration Festival, on Thursday, the 21st inst., at 3 p.m., for every guinea that is subscribed; and in the Choir for every half-guinea. Contributors of 5s. will be seated in the South Transept, and a limited number (gentlemen only) in the North and South Triforium. For the North Transept no tickets will be required. All applications for tickets must be made to Mr. Basil Tree, St. James's Hall, and not to any of the clergy or officials of the Abbey.

The Directors of the Philharmonic Society will give a special commemorative Concert at the Queen's Hall, on the 22nd inst., at which a prominent feature will be Purcell's "Ode to St. Cecilia"; a performance of the first English opera, "Dido and Æneas," will be given at the Lyceum by the students of the Royal College of Music on the 20th inst., at 2.30 p.m.; and the Concert of the Royal Choral Society, on the 21st, will include Dr. Parry's Ode "Invocation to Music," in honour of Purcell.

ROYAL ACADEMY LECTURES.

THE weekly Lectures were resumed in the Concert-room of the Institution on the 2nd ult., by Mr. W. H. Cummings, who, on this occasion, took for his subject the life and works of Maurice Greene, Mus. Doc., who, he said, was born in 1695. A considerable portion of the discourse consisted of the description and analysis of Greene's sacred and secular compositions, of which the lecturer possesses a large collection, including a number of the composer's autograph MSS., some of which were exhibited.

On the two following Wednesdays Mr. Cummings spoke upon the fascinating topic of National Songs, confining his remarks, however, to the history of some of the best known examples. The lecturer questioned the cleverness of the oft-quoted saying of Fletcher of Saltoun, "If a man were permitted to make all the ballads, he need not care who should make its laws," because the true ballad was the product of many minds and circumstances. The Germans had a saying, "National songs composed themselves," and they might be compared to wild flowers, the origin and dissemination of which it was often difficult to trace. Folk-songs might be divided into several classes, but the most important were those referring to historical events. Of such were the "Song of Roland," sung by Taillefer as the Norman host was on its way to the battle of Hastings, the melody of which dated from the eighth century; and the "Battaye of Agynkourte," in celebration of the victory of Henry V. The tune of "Lillibulero," a ballad which Dr. Percy declared "contributed not a little towards the great Revolution of 1688," was, in the opinion of the lecturer, undoubtedly composed by Henry Purcell, a copy of the tune, signed by our national composer and dated 1689, being in the British Museum. The origin of the melody of "The British Grenadiers" was unknown; apparently it had grown out of several old tunes. It might be dated 1678, when the Grenadier company was added to the British Army. The earliest printed edition appeared in 1700. The words of "Auld Lang Syne" were certainly not written by Burns, as some had maintained. This was proved by a letter written by the poet. The melody to which the verses were now sung was composed by William Shield, and occurred in the overture to his opera "Rosina," published in 1783. It was true that some of the airs in this work were by other authors. Where this was the case Shield had acknowledged the source. "The Last Rose of Summer" was an Irish tune associated, until Moore adapted it to his poem, with verses of a somewhat humorous character, entitled "The Groves of Blarney." It was commonly said that all old songs were written in the minor scale, but this was not true. Only about twenty-five per cent. of English, Scotch, and Irish tunes were really so; but the percentage was very much more in Scandinavian folk-tunes. Also referring to the origin of National Anthems the lecturer thought that English people scarcely appreciated the merits of John Bull's tune. Beethoven had said: "I must show the English a little what a blessing they have in 'God save the King.'" Its influence on the Continent was remarkable. It became the National air of Denmark and also that of Russia until 1830, when the hymn by Alexis Swoff was adopted, and Haydn was so impressed by it during his visits to England in 1791 and 1794 that, on his return to Vienna, he became anxious to write a national hymn for Austria, and, securing a commission from the Court, produced, in 1797, the tune of "God preserve the Emperor." The tune of the American "Star spangled Banner" was originally written by J. Stafford Smith, and entitled "To Anacreon in heaven," composed for the Anacreontic Society, which held its meetings at the Crown and Anchor Tavern in the Strand towards the close of the last century.

GRESHAM LECTURES.

PROFESSOR BRIDGE began, on the 15th ult., his autumn series of Gresham Lectures, at the City of London School. The first two discourses were continuations of the history of the string quartet, a subject which has worthily occupied much of the Professor's attention. Having reached the time of Beethoven, this composer's first and last quartets were analysed and subsequently played. Before referring in detail to these works, however, the lecturer made some interesting remarks, showing how greatly the development of instrumental forms was indebted to the sustained tone and extensive compass of the family of stringed instruments. The improvements effected in instruments and the increasing capabilities of executants exercised a far greater influence on composers than was commonly imagined. They acted and reacted on each other, and in a manner that made it almost impossible to adjust the respective share each took in the progress of the art. Until 1805 Beethoven was unable to write for the keyboard any note above F in alt. Higher notes were obtainable from the strings, and violinists might remember with a sense of satisfaction that they were the successors of the men who helped to untharnish Pegasus from the plough, and gave the genius of Beethoven a larger heaven in which to wing its flight. When the new sonata form was evolved the conclusion jumped to was that form was everything; and hence, in the middle of the last century, the mechanism came to be regarded as of primary importance, regardless of the thought. Beethoven began where Haydn finished. It had been said that if there had been no French Revolution there would have been no Beethoven. But this was misleading. The French Revolution did not make Beethoven possible, but both were manifestations of the struggle for liberty and naturalness against conventionality. The quartets were excellently rendered by Mr. Wall, Miss L. Wright, Mr. A. Hobday, and Mr. T. Werge.

Peculiar interest was attached to the third Lecture, the subject being "Purcell's Operas," and the illustrations consisting of the Masque music from this composer's "Dioclesian." The fine hall was completely filled by an audience that even took possession of the West gallery, and in testimony of the wide interest evinced in the forthcoming bi-centenary celebration in Westminster Abbey, the lecturer read a letter from a collier who enclosed five shillings towards the fund. After brief references to Purcell's "Dido and Æneas"—the first real English opera—"King Arthur," and "Boadicea," the lecturer said that the libretto of "Dioclesian" had been taken from Beaumont and Fletcher's play of "The Prophetess," and had been arranged by Betterton, who had added a Masque which was introduced at the end of the original play, presumably to meet the popular taste of the day. The opera was dedicated to "His Grace, Charles, Duke of Somerset," and was the only opera published (1691) in Purcell's lifetime. A fact of much interest was that the printed copies were corrected by Purcell. The copy the lecturer possessed contained between twenty and thirty corrections in the composer's own hand. At the end of some of the copies was the following interesting advertisement: "In order to the speedier Publication of this Work, I employed two several Printers: but one of them falling into some trouble, and the Volume swelling to a Bulk beyond my expectation, have been the occasions of this delay. It has been objected that some of the songs are already common; but I presume that the Subscribers, upon perusal of the Work, will easily be convinced that they are not the essential parts of it. I have according to my promise in the Proposal been very careful in the examination of every Sheet and hope the whole will appear as Correct as any yet Extant. My Desire to be able to offer it as cheap as possibly I could to the Subscribers prevailed with me so far above the Consideration of my own Interest that I find too late the Subscription money will scarcely amount to the expense of completing this Edition." In a remarkable dedication of the work "To his Grace Charles, Duke of Somerset," the author says: "Music and Poetry have ever been acknowledged Sisters, which walking hand in hand support each other: as Poetry is the harmony of Words, so Music is that of Notes; and as Poetry is a Rise above Prose and Oratory, so is Music the exaltation of Poetry. Both of them may excel apart, but surely they are most excellent when they are join'd, because nothing is then wanting to either of their Perfections: for thus they appear like Wit and Beauty in the same person. Poetry and Painting have arrived to their perfection in our own Country; Music is yet but in its nonage, a forward Child which gives hope of what it may be hereafter in England, when the Masters of it shall find more encouragement. 'Tis now learning Italian, which is its best Master, and studying a little of the French Air to give it somewhat more Gayety and Fashion. Thus being farther from the Sun, we are of later growth than our neighbour countries, and must be content to shake off our Barbarity by degrees. The present age seems already disposed to be refined, and to distinguish betwixt wild Fancy, and a just composition. . . May ever our Poets begin to grow asham'd of their harsh and broken numbers, and promise to file our uncouth language into smoother words." In his instrumentation of "Dioclesian," Purcell employed a large orchestra for the time, adding to the strings, two flutes, three oboes (one of them called a tenor), two trumpets, and a bassoon. He gave them a great deal of independent work and did not merely make them double the voice parts. The score also contained many orchestral movements. There was an overture, various "act-tunes," and several dances. There was a beautiful "Chaconne" for two flutes, an exceedingly clever canon constructed upon a ground bass, a "Chair" dance, a "Butterfly" dance, a "Country" dance, and one entitled "Canaries." The work proved a great success; and a contemporary writer (Downes) said: "It justify'd the expectation of the Court and City and got the author great reputation." Dryden, who was a long time in appreciating Purcell, speaks of him after the production of "Dioclesian" as one "in whose Person we have at length found an Englishman equal with the best abroad—at least my opinion of him has been such, since his happy and judicious Performances in the late opera." Nearly the whole of the Masque music was performed under the direction of the lecturer, by Messrs. Fell, Bell, Daniel Price, the choristers of Westminster Abbey, chorus and orchestra, all of whom, it should be added, acquitted themselves of their several tasks in a most effective manner. Much of the music may be placed amongst Purcell's best. The choruses, "Behold, O mightiest of Gods," and "Here mighty Love," are both fine numbers, the themes of the latter in particular being broad and lofty in character. The tenor solo, "Let monarchs' fight," and the Bacchanalian music are also remarkable for strength and virility. So interesting and bright is the music that it would well repay publishing in cantata form for choral societies. The scenic arrangements, however, had better be omitted, or Sir Augustus Harris called upon.

At the concluding Lecture return was made to the subject of early organ music, the chief part of the discourse showing the great influence exercised upon Bach by Buxtehude, a Dane, born in 1637 at Helsingør. Many interesting particulars were given of the early life of Bach, and examples of the organ music of both composers were admirably played by Mr. W. J. Winter on the organ in the North gallery of the hall.

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ.

We have sorrowfully to speak of this distinguished musician as "the late." He died at Manchester, of cerebral apoplexy, on the morning of Friday, the 25th ult., when also ended labours of large usefulness, carried on in this country with amazing energy for only three years short of half-a-century. The passing of Sir Charles Hallé necessarily leaves a huge gap in the musical life of England. As pianist, conductor, entrepreneur, and teacher, he filled a vast space; well-nigh ubiquitous, he was known to amateurs the country over, while his all-round ability inspired everywhere the utmost confidence. The death of such a man suggests, not the uprooting of one tree, but the simultaneous downfall of a group, robbing the landscape of a conspicuous feature and a valued ornament. Suddenness aggravates the stroke. Only the other day we heard of the return of Sir Charles and Lady Hallé from a professional tour in South Africa, and it was then the talk among his friends that he looked ten years younger.

Karl Hallé, born on April 11, 1819, at Hagen, came of a musical family. He began to play upon the pianoforte as a mere child, but studied at home till he was sixteen, when we find him placed under Rink, in Darmstadt. This connection lasted but a little while. Paris was then the goal to which every young musical athlete aspired, and, in 1836, Hallé took up his residence in the French capital. The consequent advantage at an impressionable period of life was immense, and certainly not lessened by the young German's adaptability. He became, if anything, more French than those around him, while his esprit and ready wit did as much, perhaps, as his musical distinction to make him popular. He frequently played in public with much success, and appeared, indeed, to have made himself a permanent home. But in February, 1848, a Paris street riot toppled the shaky and ill-fitting crown of Louis Philippe into the gutter. The entire social structure became disorganised, and Hallé, with the timidity of an artist who shrinks from "winter and rough weather," fled to England. He reached London, April 6, 1848, and received a warm welcome from all who had made his acquaintance in Paris. In May he made his first bow to an English audience, at an Orchestral Concert in Covent Garden Theatre, shortly after which he was engaged by John Ella for the Musical Union. An event far more important than these rapidly followed. Musical Manchester resolved to secure the new-comer for its own, and promptly did so by offering what a contemporary writer described as a position and prospects "in all respects first-rate." What important results have flowed from the steps then taken everybody knows.

During subsequent years nothing was more remarkable than Hallé's restless energy, which seemed to increase as larger opportunities for its exercise presented themselves. The work and distinction of a successful pianist by no means contented him. He aspired to reign as King of an orchestra, and, in 1857, began the Subscription Concerts which soon made Manchester famous as a musical centre. There was much daring in the engagement of a permanent orchestra, but Hallé carried the thing through, and caused his band to be known and welcomed in almost every large town of the Kingdom. Then he found time to associate himself with the Monday Popular Concerts, while his Pianoforte Recitals were, also, for many years regular features of the London summer season. All through this he taught numerous pupils, and was quite ready, as at Bristol, to undertake the direction of musical festivals. Advancing age seemed to make little impression upon him. He could not conquer the "last enemy," but for a long while he appeared to defy Time. Now his multitudinous labours are ended here. That they will be resumed elsewhere is almost an instinctive conviction. We cannot imagine Charles Hallé resting.

Hallé's social qualities remained with him to the end. There was no better raconteur than he, and men who made his acquaintance were surprised to find the sharp man of business delighting to call forth roars of laughter through the fine art of the story-teller. It is useless to anticipate the changes which the removal of so conspicuous a man will occasion. Enough for the present moment that we are conscious of heavy loss.

REVIEWS.

Purcell Commemoration Publications:—Ode on St. Cecilia's Day; Three Scenes from "King Arthur"; Ten Pianoforte Pieces. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

WITHIN the next two or three weeks we shall be celebrating—or, to speak more properly, commemorating—the bi-centenary of the death of one of the greatest musicians England ever produced. The performances in Westminster Abbey, the Queen's Hall, and elsewhere will call for notice in due course; but in the meantime attention may be drawn to some new issues of music by a master whom all art-loving England is already delighting to honour. Many Odes for St. Cecilia's Day have been penned at various periods—those of Handel to words by Dryden and Dr. Hubert Parry to, lines by Pope being specially conspicuous. Purcell's Ode, written by Dr. Nicholas Brady, and composed in 1692, is very little known, and its approaching performance will amount to something like a revelation. It is in fifteen brief numbers for the usual quartet of soloists, chorus, and the orchestra of the time, and is full of the life and spirit which characterise Purcell's efforts generally. The present vocal score is edited, with pianoforte accompaniments arranged from the original, by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland.

The portions of the better known work, "King Arthur," are "The Camp Scene," "The Song of Victory," and "The Frost Scene." The work was penned in 1691, the text being by Dryden, "Glorious John," as one of Sir Walter Scott's characters is made to call him. The tenor solo and chorus, "Come, if you dare," is a familiar excerpt from the concert-room, but the rest of the score will probably be new to the majority of those who will shortly hear it. Mr. W. H. Cummings says in his preface to his newly edited edition that the first performance of "King Arthur" took place at the Queen's Theatre. The piece was most successful, but unfortunately the music was not published; the composer died in 1695, and three years afterwards a few separate movements were printed by his widow in the "Orpheus Britannicus."

The ten so-called pianoforte pieces were chiefly written for the harpsichord or spinet; they also include sonatas intended for viols with clavier accompaniment. But Mr. Cummings says that "there is abundant evidence that on occasions when the viols were not available the sonatas were performed as solos on a harpsichord." He adds with the fullest justification that in adopting the method of finger numbering, with the thumb as 1, "he is following the practice of Purcell's time, and that this is in truth the old English fingering."

Twelve Salon Duets. For Violin and Pianoforte. By L. Spohr. Two Books.
Six Slow Movements. From the Violin Concertos of L. Spohr.
 [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The term salon is frequently applied to music in a depreciatory sense. Yet, strictly speaking, salon music means merely music suitable to a drawing-room; the latter, with regard to those who frequent it, may be of a high class, and so may the former. Louis Spohr often played the violin at public concerts, though still more frequently at private ones; and he wrote much elegant, showy music for such occasions. In the two books now under notice, we have the set of six pieces forming Op. 127, and another similar set marked Op. 135. The pieces are real duets, not violin solos with pianoforte accompaniment. They were most probably written for himself and his first wife, Dorette Scheidler, a clever performer both on the harp and the pianoforte. Book 1 contains three pieces in slow, and three in quick time. The Larghetto in G opens with a smooth, flowing theme, and the middle section, both in key and character, offers effective contrast. The Adagio in A has a theme of great calm and dignity; the light, soft chords on the pianoforte support the melody, which is to be played, as indicated, sopra la 4^a. Of the quick pieces, the Rondo Vivace is sure to attract players of both instruments. In the second set (Op. 135) are to be found the engaging Barcarolle in G and the light-tripping Scherzo in D, both so thoroughly characteristic of the master; also the Air Varié in F, of which the variations are clever and showy.

Spohr's Concertos are favourites with all violinists, and the six Slow Movements from them will, therefore, in this convenient form—i.e., with pianoforte accompaniment—prove most acceptable. They have been taken from Nos. 3, 4, 6, 9, 11, and 15. Of music so well known there is no occasion to speak.

Christmas Scenes. Cantata for Female Voices. By F. H. Cowen.

Twelve New Christmas Carols. By Robin H. Legge.

Twelve Christmas Carols. Compiled by Mrs. Carey Brock and M. A. Sidebotham.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Music for the genial season of Noël will shortly be in request, and the practice of carol singing has happily again become general in this country. Mr. Cowen's cantata, however, is of course intended for the School and Concert-room. The libretto, by Mr. Clifton Bingham, is of the simplest possible character, dealing in what may be termed impersonal fashion with the appearances of Father Christmas, Carollers, and Santa Claus, together with scenes in which Christmas bells, church music, and social festivities are introduced. The music is appropriately bright and cheerful in character, but certainly not trivial. Mr. Cowen could not be otherwise than artistic even in unpretentious efforts, and in this instance he has put together some very tuneful and piquant strains written for soprano solo, trio for mezzo-sopranos or contraltos, and two-part chorus. It is a charming and not by any means difficult little work, and should be greatly in request from season to season. The carols by Mr. Robin H. Legge have quaintly written words by Mr. A. E. Alston, and the music, for voices in unison, with accompaniment, is equally simple and pleasantly old-world in style. The other collection named above is scarcely more pretentious, though the tunes are for voices in four-part harmony. Among the composers are Dr. G. C. Martin, the late Henry Smart, the Rev. Charles Erskine, and Mr. Berthold Tours. Both carol books are issued in small and convenient form, equally suitable for church or chapel, open-air singing, or the family circle.

THE German Mendelssohn Scholarship, amounting to 1,500 marks a year, for executive skill, has just been awarded to Miss Elsie Hall—of English parentage and a native of Australia—after a severe competition, in which a large number of German candidates took part. The adjudicators were Professor Joachim, Herr Woldemar Bargiel, and Dr. Riemann. No award has been made this year for composition.

FOREIGN NOTES.

ALTAMURA (ITALY).—The birth-centenary of Francesco Saverio Mercadante, the composer of "La Vestale," "Il Bravo," and of many other operas once greatly in vogue, was celebrated on September 17, at this, his native town, by a special performance of "La Vestale," at the Municipal Theatre, which has been re-named Teatro Mercadante and was adorned with a commemorative tablet on the occasion.

BERGEN.—A statue of Ole Bull, the famous violin virtuoso and founder of the leading Norwegian theatre, is shortly to be erected in this, his native town; the necessary funds, some fifty thousand kroner, having already been subscribed, partly in the United States, which became a second fatherland to him. When he fell dangerously ill he was carried to Norway, and expired in Bergen, in 1880.

BERLIN.—Signor Sonzogno's season of Italian opera at the Theatre unter den Linden, and afterwards at the Neues Theater here, has not proved very successful. One of the principal novelties produced—viz., Mascagni's "Silvano"—attracted some popular attention, but is considered by critics but a weak reproduction of "Cavalleria Rusticana," both as regards the score and the libretto.

—A young Russian violinist, M. Alexander Petchnikoff, caused quite a sensation at a Concert given by him at the Bechstein Hall last month, he being equally admired as an interpreter of classical and modern music. The enthusiasm displayed by the audience is shared by the press, who predict a most brilliant future for the young virtuoso. M. Petchnikoff, who is the son of a humble soldier, and only twenty years of age, plays on a magnificent Stradivarius, the gift of the Emperor of Russia.—Herr Arthur Nikisch conducted the first Philharmonic Concert of the season last month with much success, Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 3), Tschaiakowsky's Fifth Symphony, and the Overture to "Tannhäuser" being the principal pieces, while Josef Hofmann was the much-applauded pianist.—After being closed for four months the Royal Opera House was re-opened on the 23rd ult., when an excellent performance of Beethoven's "Fidelio" was given in the presence of the Emperor and Empress. During the interim many improvements have been effected, not the least of which is the enlargement of the orchestra, which is now capable of holding 100 executants. It has also been lowered and provided with a double floor with a view to increased resonance. The new organ by Sauer will doubtless often add to the enjoyment of the audiences and the increased facilities of ingress and egress will also add to their comfort. Both the theatre and the large concert-hall have profited by the brushes of the cleaner and painter.

BRUSSELS.—Dr. Hans Richter will conduct one of the "Concerts Populaires" during the present season, in the course of which the pianist, Signor Ferruccio Busoni, and Herr Willy Burmester will appear amongst other solo performers. Herr Edgar Tinel's new oratorio, "Godeleva," will also be produced, for the first time, at one of these Concerts.—M. Franz Servais has completed the score of a grand opera, entitled "L'Apollonide," portions of which have already been performed with considerable success in Belgian concert-rooms. The work is to be first brought out during the present season at the Cassel Hof-Theater, under Herr Mottl's direction.

CASSEL.—Auber's "Cheval de Bronze" has just been revived at the Court Theatre here with some success. The performance derives some added interest from the fact of Herr Humperdinck's version of the score having been used on this occasion, consisting chiefly in an amplified orchestration, which Herr Humperdinck supplied some years since for a performance at the Frankfurt Stadt-Theater, long before his present happy association with Fairyland.

CHRISTIANIA.—The first Concert of the season of the Philharmonic Society was given here last month, under the direction of Herr Grieg. The programme contained some interesting pieces—viz., a new "Legende" for orchestra, by the Conductor; variations on a popular theme, by Herr F. Døe, the ambassador of Sweden and Norway in Paris, an excellent musician; and another orchestral composition, entitled "Zovahayda," by Johann Svendsen. The latter, it may be incidentally mentioned, after thirteen years of unproductiveness, has just published a new orchestral

The Fee for the Entrance Examination is One Guinea, payable in advance. Successful candidates pay as an Entrance Fee a further sum of Four Guineas. The Fee for the entire course of Study is Eleven Guineas per Term. The Course of Instruction includes Two Weekly Lessons in a Principal Study; one in a Second Study, when deemed desirable by the Principal; one in Harmony; one in Elocution, for Singers; and the advantages of the Sight Singing Class, the Chamber Music Classes, and the Orchestral and Choral Practices. A limited number of Wind Instrument players are admitted as Orchestral students at Seven Guineas per Term. An Operatic Class, for the study of the Lyrical Drama, is open to Students on payment of an additional fee of 1½ Guineas per Term. Classes for the Study of Modern Languages, Deportment, Fencing, and Stage Dancing are also open to Students on payment of a small additional fee.

There are a number of Scholarships in connection with the Academy which are competed for periodically by Students and others. Among the principal of these are:—

for proficiency in any branch of Music, and entitling the holder to two years' free instruction.

THE JOHN THOMAS WELSH SCHOLARSHIP, for Vocalists and Instrumentalists at alternate elections, and entitling the holder to three years' free instruction.

THE LISZT SCHOLARSHIP, for Musical Composition and Pianoforte playing, entitles the successful candidate to three years' free instruction in the Academy, and, after that, to a yearly sum to assist him or her in the extension of his or her musical experience for two years on the Continent.

THE MACFARREN SCHOLARSHIP, for promise in Musical Composition; the holder being entitled to three years' free tuition.

THE GORING THOMAS SCHOLARSHIP, for Operatic Composition, entitling the holder to three years' free tuition.

THE ERARD CENTENARY SCHOLARSHIPS, for Pianoforte and Harp playing, and entitling the holders to three years' free tuition.

In addition to the Scholarships, a number of money and other prizes are open to Competition by the Students; and Certificates of Merit, Silver Medals, and Bronze Medals are awarded annually for the various subjects of the Curriculum to such Students as show sufficient progress and have been studying throughout the Academic year.

Students who on leaving show special merit and ability receive the additional distinction of being elected Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the Initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

METROPOLITAN EXAMINATION.

An Examination (independent of Academy teaching) of Musical Composers or Performers, and Teachers, is held annually in London in January. Successful Candidates are created Licentiates of the Royal Academy of Music, with the exclusive right to append to their names the initials L.R.A.M.; and receive diplomas to the effect that they are judged to be fully qualified for the branches of the musical profession in which respectively they have been examined. The Syllabus for this Examination is published on May 1.

Numerous Concerts and Lectures are given, at which Annual Subscribers to the Institution have the right of being present, and of introducing friends, in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

composition—viz., an Andante funèbre. Madame Ellen Gulbranson, who has been engaged for next year's Bayreuth performances, was greatly applauded in songs by Grieg and Massenet.

COBURG.—A new opera, "Ludwig der Springer," by Herr Sandberger, was brought out with much success on the 12th ult., at the Court Theatre, on the occasion of the twenty-first anniversary of the hereditary Prince Alfred.

COLOGNE.—The new one-act opera by the tenor, Herr Bruno Heydrich, entitled "Amen," was brought out at the Stadt-Theater last month, and met with an exceedingly good reception. Herr Heydrich has proved himself a very able dramatic composer, his instrumentation, moreover, being effective and musicianlike. The libretto—of the "Cavalleria Rusticana" type—is the weakest part of the work, which was conducted by the composer.

COPENHAGEN.—An interesting musical contest was held here recently in connection with the Women's Exhibition. The committee had offered prizes for which lady musicians alone could compete, the chief award being for a cantata for solo voices and chorus, another prize being for a violin suite, and a third for a chorus for female voices. The chairman of the jury was M. Néruda, brother of Lady Hallé. Two ladies, Madame Lago (a Swede) and Madame Mayer (a Dane), tied for the cantata prize; while none of the violin suites was deemed worthy of an award; and the third prize, for the chorus, fell to Madame Aulin, a Swede. On the following day a Concert was given, the programme being limited to the works of lady composers, and the whole of the executants being women. A String Quartet by Madame Elfrida Andree was highly spoken of, and the prize chorus was performed by a choir of ladies, the bâton being wielded by Miss Fanny Gaetge.

DRESDEN.—The fiftieth anniversary of the first performance of "Tannhäuser" was celebrated at the Royal Theatre here, on the 19th ult., by a special performance of the work in its original form—i.e., without the subsequent addenda for the ill-starred first Paris performance. Herr Ludwig Hartmann, the eminent musical critic, has published an interesting brochure on the opera in question, and its progress during the last half-century.

EISENACH.—The contents of Herr Oesterlein's Richard Wagner Museum, hitherto stored away temporarily in the Municipal Building, are being transferred to the Villa Reuter, their proper quarters, and will shortly be accessible to the public.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.—Mascagni's new opera "Silvano" was given at the Stadt-Theater on the 13th ult., by Signor Sonzogno's operatic company, and met with a very favourable reception.

HAMBURG.—The fund for the projected Bülow Monument in this town amounts at present to eighteen thousand marks, nearly one-third of which sum was realised by a Concert recently given here for that object by Professor Barth, of Berlin.—Herr Pollini has secured the right of first performance of Herr Ignaz Brüll's new opera, "Gloria," the production of which during the present season is looked forward to here with much interest.

LEIPZIG.—The concert season was inaugurated, on the 1st ult., with a performance, at the Albert Hall, by the Liszt-Verein, which on this occasion celebrated the tenth anniversary of its foundation. Under the direction of Herr Weingartner, the excellent Berlin Capellmeister, Liszt's "Faust" Symphony, the symphonic poem "Hungaria," the Pianoforte Concerto in A major (pianist, Herr Alfred Reisenauer), and other compositions of the master were offered to a numerous and enthusiastic audience. The Society was formed in 1885, under the zealous leadership of Professor Martin Krause.—Dr. Carl Reinecke, by express desire of the King of Saxony, will retain his post as senior Professor at the Conservatorium, while his pension from the Gewandhaus is to be reckoned at his former full salary.

—A poem, entitled "Die Revolution," attributed to Richard Wagner, recently published by Dr. W. Kienzl in the Neue Deutsche Rundschau, has been making the round of the German press. It was found among some papers left by the composer with a friend, on the occasion of his flight from Dresden in May, 1849, and is said to be in his handwriting. There is, however, sufficient intrinsic evidence to question the authenticity of the alleged authorship.

MAGDEBURG.—The score of Humperdinck's new fairy opera "The Wolf and the Seven Kids" has just been published here by the firm of Heinrichshofen. It is an unpretentious work, intended, it would seem, in the first place, for performance in private circles, with a charming libretto written, as in the case of "Hänsel und Gretel," by the composer's sister, Frau A. de Wette.

MOSCOW.—Vasya Fakelmann, a boy nine years of age, has just caused a sensation, on seeking admittance to the Conservatoire, by his marvellous violin playing. He is the son of a railway guard, entirely self-taught, and his course of regular instruction at the Conservatoire is now being paid for by some benevolent amateurs in this town.

MUNICH.—Among the more important new operatic works to be produced at the Hof-Theater during the present season are "Guntram," by Richard Strauss; "Kunihild," by Cyrill Kistler; and Kienzl's "Der Evangelist." Much interest also attaches to the proposed re-mounting of the two "Iphigenies" of Gluck.—The concert season of the Musical Academy here commences on the 1st inst., when important excerpts will be given from "Parsifal," under the direction of Herr Fischer. During the winter Beethoven's nine Symphonies will be performed, under Herr Richard Strauss's bâton, the programmes also including an important new orchestral composition by the latter, entitled "Till Eulenspiegel."

PRAGUE.—The 300th performance of Smetana's "The Bartered Bride" has just been recorded at the National Theatre, this being the highest number of representations as yet achieved by any opera at this Institution. The work was first produced in 1886.—At the German Theatre, Dr. Kienzl's new opera, "Der Evangelist," was given for the first time here last month, under the direction of Herr Schalck, and in the presence of the composer, when it met with unqualified success.

ROME.—Verdi's early opera, "I Lombardi," has just been revived here with enormous success. By a curious coincidence the work has also been recently re-mounted, under the title of "Jerusalem," at the Nederlands Opera, in Amsterdam, where it met with several highly successful performances.

ST. PETERSBURG.—A series of Concerts in memory of the late Anton Rubinstein is being organised by the Russian Philharmonic Society both here and in Moscow. Herr Josef Hofmann has been invited to take part in the performances.

STOCKHOLM.—A gifted young Swedish composer, M. Vilhem Stenhammar, has written an opera, "The Feast of Solhag," the libretto founded upon Ibsen's early romantic drama of that name, to which a German composer, Herr Pfitzner, has also recently supplied some incidental music. The new work has been accepted for performance at the Royal Opera of Berlin.

STUTTGART.—A two-act opera, "Zaira," by the French composer, Vêronge de la Nux, the libretto by M. Edouard Blau, was brought out, on the 10th ult., at the Court Theatre, and was well received.—Herr Samuel de Lange has been appointed to the important conductorship of the Society for Classical Church Music, vacated by Herr Zumpe.

TURIN.—Wagner's "Die Götterdämmerung" was performed at the Vittorio Emanuele Theatre for the first time last month with much success. The other parts constituting the tetralogy are shortly to follow. Among other novelties to be brought out during the present season may be instanced a new "Mefistofele," by the Maestro Canti.

VERONA.—Signora Epanina Rieschi, has been appointed to the conductorship at the Manzoni Theatre in this town, where she made a successful début with Rossini's "Il Barbiere." She is a pupil of the Naples Conservatorio.

VIENNA.—M. Massenet's new opera, "La Navarraise," was produced at the Imperial Opera, on the 4th ult., with Fräulein Renard and M. Van Dyck in the principal parts. The new work, which was very well received by the audience, among whom was the composer himself, has been somewhat severely criticised in the press.—Herr Ignaz Brüll, the composer of "The Golden Cross," is about to resume his former activity as a pianist in concert tours in Germany and probably also in England. It is about a decade or more since Herr Brüll played at the Monday Popular and other Concerts in London.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE musical season may be said to have commenced here on September 17 with the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, which gave a week's opera (including two Matinées). The operas performed were consecutively Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Ivanhoe," Hamish MacCunn's "Jeannie Deane," Donizetti's "Daughter of the Regiment," Mozart's infantile opera "Bastien and Bastienne," Humperdinck's "Hänsel and Gretel," Weber's "Der Freischütz," Bizet's "Carmen," and Wagner's "Flying Dutchman."

The Philharmonic Society opened the first Concert of its twenty-second season, on the 3rd ult., with a miscellaneous Concert, in which was included Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm. For this the artists engaged were Mdlle. Zélie de Lussan, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Peterkin, Miss Sybil Palliser (solo pianist), and Mons. Achille Rivarde (solo violin). For the remainder of the season a most attractive programme has been submitted to the subscribers of the Society, including a miscellaneous Concert on the 4th inst., with Madame Adeline Patti and others; on the 29th inst., Haydn's "Creation," and the annual Christmas "Messiah" Concert.

On February 14 there will be a second miscellaneous Concert, and the season winds up, on March 20, with a performance of Berlioz's "Faust." In addition to these, Mr. Farley Sinkins is running a series of Popular Concerts in lieu of Dr. Collison's Subscription Concerts, and the management of the Saturday Night Popular Concerts has now been taken over by Mr. Louis Mantell, who is entirely re-organising them.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

I HAVE already referred to the principal Concerts in store for us—the four Harrison Concerts, the Festival Choral Society's Concerts, and Mr. Stockley's Orchestral Concerts, twelve in all; to these I have to add a Richter Concert, Monsieur de Greef's Pianoforte Recital, Mr. Grossmith's entertainments, a Chamber Concert with Miss Fanny Davies as pianist, besides the ordinary choral and miscellaneous Concerts given by our various amateur bodies on Saturday evenings.

The fine band of Her Majesty's 1st Life Guards, under the direction of Mr. Joel Englefield, gave a Concert in the Town Hall on September 30, which, I regret to say, was poorly attended, although it was in aid of the funds of the Norton Street Working Men's Institute. Those present thoroughly enjoyed the excellent programme of music, which included selections from Wagner's "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin," the three popular Dances by Edward German, from "Henry VIII.," without which no Concert appears complete, and other acceptable pieces. Songs were given by Madame Strathearn, an accomplished vocalist, and some humorous musical sketches by Mr. George Pritchard.

Mr. Percy Stranders, one of our foremost local pianists, and a Professor at the Midland Institute School of Music, gave three historical Pianoforte Recitals in the large Lecture Theatre of the Institute, in the presence of large audiences.

Great disappointment was felt by the non-appearance of Madame Adeline Patti at Messrs. Harrison's first Concert of the series 1895-6, given in the Town Hall, on the 7th ult. At a moment's notice the services of Miss Thudichum were secured. The other artists who took part in the Concert were Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Hirwen Jones, Mr. Douglas Powell, Mr. Frederick Dawson (pianoforte), Miss Marianne Eissler (violin), Miss Clara Eissler (harp), Mr. Wilhelm Ganz (accompanist).

The Turner Opera Company gave a week's opera season at the Grand Theatre and produced Boieldieu's charming opera of "La Dame Blanche," which has not been heard here for thirteen years. The revival was a complete success and attracted a large house. Mr. Turner was in excellent voice and the opera had been well rehearsed and staged. The singing of the chorus was conspicuous by its precision and tone power. The magnificent Finale of the second act was given with remarkable fire and spirit. The répertoire for the week included "Robin Hood," "Trovatore," "The Lily of Killarney," "The Bohemian Girl," and "Maritana."

Mr. Stockley's first Concert of the present series was given in the Town Hall on the 10th ult. The principal novelties consisted of an orchestral piece, entitled "Lamento," and a Violin Concerto with orchestral accompaniment, both by Mr. B. Hollander, who conducted his works. The "Lamento" is in the form of a poème symphonique and is intended to represent the "Birth of Man," "Human Love," "Fate," and "Lament." Its themes are melodious, and the composer gives plenty of colour and warmth to his orchestration, which is remarkably polyphonic in character. The Concerto, however, is the better work, and Mr. Hollander had for his interpreter his friend, Max Mossel, a violinist of first rank, who has lately settled in this city. He is a master of every form of technique, and possesses an excellent style which shows high artistic temperament. Both composer and player were recalled with enthusiasm on the conclusion of the Concert. Great things may justly be expected of the composer, who is a sound and earnest musician.

The autumn season of musical Matinées in connection with the Royal Society of Artists was successfully inaugurated, on the 12th ult., by an excellent Concert, under the directorship of Mr. Oscar Pollack.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE record of musical events in Bristol up to the present is but a meagre one. A few Concerts have taken place, but, for the most part, they have been of a minor order. Miss Maude Fuggle, a talented young lady, who was assisted by several local artists, gave a successful Concert on September 24. Mr. Augustus Simmons's Concert, on September 23, was also of a pleasing character. The Clifton Pompadour Musical Society, whose tasteful singing of part-songs, under the direction of Madame Probert-Goodwin, is a feature of the accomplishments of the ladies, took part in a musical entertainment at Woolcott Park on the 10th ult. Miss Maude Bryant gave a Concert on the 14th ult. Madame Patti and party visited Bristol on September 30, and M. de Greef, the pianist, came on the 2nd ult. Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Borwick gave a Song and Pianoforte Recital at Clifton College on the 18th ult. Performances by military bands are the chief attractions of the Bristol Handicrafts Exhibition. Here the record of performances ends.

Prospects, however, are of the brightest. As foreshadowed in THE MUSICAL TIMES of last month, further musical developments are taking place in our city and neighbourhood. In connection with the Bristol Society of Instrumentalists (the largest body of amateur players in the kingdom) a new section has been established for practice on Thursday afternoons every fortnight. This arrangement will afford opportunities for amateurs living in places at a distance to take part in ensemble playing.

A new choral society has been established at St. George, under the direction of Mr. J. F. Nash, who for years has done good and fruitful service in the training of young singers. It is gratifying to learn that the singing and voice training classes of the Bristol Musical Festival Society have successfully entered upon the fifteenth session, under the guidance of Mr. Walter J. Kidner. The senior and junior branches of the Bristol North Musical Society, of which Mr. J. F. Nash is conductor, have started work again. Haydn's cantata "The Seasons" has been taken in hand by the older section. St. John's (Clifton) Choral Society has recommenced work and is rehearsing "The Hymn of Praise."

The Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society has re-assembled, and the "Golden Legend," "The Messiah," and the "Creation" are to be studied. At Clevedon a project is on foot for forming a Society on the lines of that at the neighbouring seaside town of Weston.

MUSIC IN DUNDEE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE first meeting of the recently formed Dundee Society of Musicians, which has already many members, was held on September 30. Professor J. F. Bridge, who is an honorary member of the Society, delivered a very interesting Lecture on "Shakespeare and Music." Mr. J. More Smieton presided, and musical illustrations were provided by local performers. On the 8th ult. a most enjoyable Recital was given by M. de Greef. The first Harrison-Simpson Concert was held on the 11th ult., when Miss Margaret Macintyre was the chief attraction, and deservedly so. The other performers were Madame Belle Cole, the Misses Eissler, and Messrs. Hirwen Jones, Douglas Powell, and Frederick Dawson, all of whom were warmly received. Mr. Fraser Harris gave the first of his four musical Lectures on the 15th ult., the subject being Johann Sebastian Bach. Both the Lecture and the musical illustrations, performed by Miss L. Sharp and Messrs. Stephen, Fleming, and an orchestra under the conductorship of Mr. A. M. Stooles, were admirable.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

THE meeting of the Church Congress in Norwich (8th to the 11th ult.) has tended to delay the commencement of musical operations in the city, but the local societies are now settling down to their various practices. The annual meetings of the Philharmonic Society and the Gate House Choir have been held, and at both satisfactory reports were given. The Festival Choir is hard at work at "Athalie," which will be the principal feature at the forthcoming Concert on December 5.

The only meeting of the Church Congress interesting from a musical point of view was that held in St. Andrew's Hall on the evening of the 10th ult., when Dr. Armes, Organist of Durham Cathedral, read a paper on "Church Music of Purcell's period," with illustrations given by the Norwich Cathedral Choir, accompanied by a small band, the whole conducted by Dr. F. Bates, with Dr. Bunnett at the organ. Unfortunately, Dr. Armes's voice was not strong enough to reach those sitting at the back of the hall, a great disappointment to many; but to those more favourably placed the paper was a source of genuine enjoyment, regret being expressed that the Doctor's remarks were not more extended. The illustrations included Child's "O Lord, grant the King a long life," Wise's "Have pity upon me, O ye friends," Humfrey's "O praise God in His holiness," Turner's "Lift up your heads," and Purcell's Te Deum in D. The band also played the opening Symphony to Cooke's "Put me not to rebuke" and that to Pelham Humfrey's "O praise the Lord." At the close of Dr. Armes's paper the Rev. Professor Shuttleworth made some interesting remarks upon the rendering of the musical portions of Divine worship in the past and present.

Garrett's Harvest Cantata was rendered at St. Peter Permountgate Church on September 25, under the direction of Mr. C. H. Duffield (assistant-organist of Norwich Cathedral). A series of fortnightly Organ Recitals was commenced by Mr. Duffield in this church on the 13th ult.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A GLANCE at the syllabus of work in the Faculty of Music at Edinburgh University shows that Professor Niecks has not abated a jot of the energy and enterprise which so happily distinguished the beginning of his reign—may it be long and prosperous! There are in all five classes, the fees for which are one or two guineas, accordingly as they meet once or twice a week. Professor Niecks is to deliver (1) twenty lectures on the History of Music (especially of the last two centuries); (2) twenty lectures on Musical Analysis (works of Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, and Wagner); (3) forty lectures on Harmony, Melody, and Rhythm; (4) forty lectures on Advanced Harmony, &c.; and (5) twenty lectures on Counterpoint and Composition. Besides these lectures the Professor has arranged for six Historical Concerts, to which all students of the above classes will be admitted free. At one of these ancient music is to be interpreted by the famous Dolmetsch party; at another madrigals will be sung by the "Harmonists," a small company which has many points of surpassing excellence; and the other Concerts will be devoted to string quartets (chiefly French and modern) interpreted by the Professor himself, with the aid of his assistants of last year, Messrs. Guyer, Colin McKenzie, and Grant McNeill.

Our concert season was opened, on the 16th ult., by Messrs. Paterson and Sons, who arranged for a Recital by M. de Greef on that date. The well-known Belgian pianist was happiest in his selection from Grieg's music. The "Norwegian Bridal Procession" was most charmingly and picturesquely played. Liszt's "Liebestraum" was also a notable artistic success.

On the 19th ult. a Matinée was given in the Empire Theatre, at which the chief attractions were the Meister Glee Singers and Madame Gomez. A large audience and frequent encores testified to the power of promise and the pleasure given by fulfilment. Mr. John Saunders won especial favour by several artistically rendered violin solos. The other artists were Miss Mary Harris and Madame Hast.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Belgian pianist, M. de Greef, came amongst us for the first time on the evening of the 7th ult., at the first of Messrs. Paterson's series. Considerable interest centred in the new-comer's début, and it may at once be said that he has made friends with a Glasgow audience by reason of his sound and conscientious method. Many gifted pianists may, indeed, derive instruction from his reading of Grieg and Schumann, more particularly the devotees of his friend the Norwegian master. Messrs. Philip Halstead and Elkan Kosman submitted, at the second Concert, on the 18th ult., a programme drawn almost entirely from the modern school, and introduced to the audience two Sonatas for pianoforte and violin from the pens of Richard Strauss and Willem Kes. Both works are undoubtedly clever, and bid for favour amongst those in search of the latest artistic novelties. Amateurs are, moreover, indebted to the Concert-givers for an acquaintance with the style of the composer of "Guntram," as also some knowledge of the faith within the new Conductor of the Scottish Orchestra. The vocalist was Miss Sylvia Rita, a young and promising soprano, who has profited greatly by her tuition under Madame Marchesi. Other Concerts under Messrs. Paterson's direction included those of Dr. Richter and his orchestra (24th ult.), the Meister Glee Singers, and Madame Albani's party, each and all having taken place too late for notice in the present issue. Later on Mr. Sarasate comes to Glasgow, as also Mr. Stavenhagen and other eminent soloists, so that the scheme promises to be an artistic success.

The first of the Harrison Concerts for the season (9th ult.) was robbed of its chief attraction owing to the indisposition of Madame Patti. Miss Thudicum, however, deputised for the great prima donna, and a somewhat mixed programme was supported by Madame Belle Cole, Messrs. Hirwen Jones, Powell, Dawson (pianist), and others, to the evident satisfaction of the popular ear. The Saturday Concerts at St. Andrew's Hall and Mr. Airlie's scheme at the City Hall have drawn out crowded audiences. Many well-known vocalists and instrumentalists have appeared at these gatherings, and it ought also to be said that no small measure of interest was accorded the fine band of the 1st Life Guards, brought to Glasgow, on the evening of the 12th ult., by Messrs. Muir, Wood and Co. Mr. Bernard M. Carrodus, a worthy son of a worthy sire, was a leading attraction at the Concert, on the 14th ult., under the auspices of the Amalgamated Musicians' Union; and Mr. J. K. Strachan's Monday evening Organ Recitals at St. Andrew's Hall have been so successful that another series may be called for before long. Dr. Peace was a welcome contributor to Messrs. Ewing and McIntosh's programme on the afternoon of the 19th ult., and the Cathedral organist also made a great impression at his recent Recital at Coatbridge, where, by the way, "Elijah" has been placed in rehearsal by the local Choral Union.

The opening Concert of the Choral and Orchestral Union series takes place on the 5th inst., when the first part of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" and the same composer's "Hear my Prayer" and 42nd Psalm will be given. November truly bids fair to be a busy month, and the social functions will include a dinner to Mr. Kes by the Glasgow Society of Musicians.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

WHY two such trivialities as Haydn's "Military" Symphony and Mozart's "Seraglio" Overture were included in the first Concert of the Philharmonic Society, given on the 8th ult., is past understanding; and to employ to such an end the extremely fine band which Sir Charles Hallé has re-united seems little else than sheer waste of power. More acceptable were Schubert's "Italian" and Dvorák's "In der Natur" Overtures, the latter composition proving an extremely welcome novelty. In the performance of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor Mr. Leonard Borwick found a congenial task, and the orchestra fairly divided the honours with the solo player. Miss Macintyre was the vocalist. At the second Concert, on the 22nd ult., two familiar overtures—Cherubini's "Lodoiska" and Smetana's "Lustspiel"—were played, the more interesting numbers being an entracte by Kretschmer, a Haydn-Brahms set of Variations, and a Suite of Raff's, entitled "La fée d'amour." Miss Berry was engaged as vocalist, and Señor Sarasate as solo violin, his chief contribution being Mendelssohn's Concerto, with his treatment of which everyone is familiar.

The first Smoking Concert of the Liverpool Orchestral Society took place, under Mr. Rodewald, on the 19th ult., Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony and German's new "Gipsy Suite" being most happily laid under contribution. On the 29th the same excellent conductor was to direct the open rehearsal of the Società Armonica, in the absence of its regular chief, and the venerable organisation is to be specially congratulated upon the process of rejuvenation which has been achieved in this, its forty-eighth year of existence. The Sunday Society gave its first two Orchestral Concerts of this, its tenth season, on the 13th and 20th ult., in St. George's Hall, under Mr. W. I. Argent, the band having been permanently enlarged to seventy performers. A week later, on the 27th ult., the clever Sisters Eissler played for the same Society.

Such performances as those of the three Societies last-named emphasise what has been before stated herein—namely, that Liverpool must be looked upon as more orchestral than choral in its tastes. Nevertheless, it is well to note that the recently re-galvanised Musical Society, of which Mr. D. O. Parry is conductor, exhibits even greater signs of vitality than last season. The programme for that just inaugurated is to consist of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Handel's "Messiah," and Gounod's "Redemption." So far, no other society of importance East of the Mersey has announced its existence; but on the Cheshire shore the Rock Ferry amateurs are working at Schumann's "Pilgrimage of the rose" and Mendelssohn's "O come, let us sing," under Mr. Pemberton; while the Liscard Musical Society, under Mr. Argent, has selected Handel's "Judas" and Gounod's "Redemption" for its next Concerts.

Dr. Hiles, who has recently joined the directorate of the Music School, delivered an excellent Lecture at that Institution on the 14th ult. It would seem not improbable that the advent of the recognised Professor of Owens University College, Manchester, may a little later lead to something in the way of the affiliation of the Music School with the Liverpool branch of Victoria University, in the curriculum of which music has so far found no place. In the meantime a new "Central College of Music" has been established by a number of local professors, and the further development of this scheme will be watched with interest.

Dr. Hans Richter has been with us again, and what has been said as to the taste of Liverpool audiences for orchestral music was placed fully in evidence on the 26th ult., for which date the booking of seats at the Philharmonic Hall was said to have been from the very first announcement exceptionally heavy. As usual, the works of Richard Wagner had a large say in the construction of the programme, the latter including this composer's Overtures to the "Flying Dutchman" and "Tannhäuser," "Charfreitagszauber," and "Trauer Marsch." Mr. Edward Lloyd was announced to sing also Wagnerian songs.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

AT the Schiller Anstalt, the sweet sounds heralding the approach of winter have first been heard on the 7th ult., at a charming little Concert held under the direction of Herr Carl Fuchs, when Mr. Leonard Borwick played delightfully Schumann's Toccata with other pieces, and, in conjunction with the director, Beethoven's Sonata in A and Chopin's Polonaise in C, both for clavier and violoncello; Mr. Plunket Greene contributing songs by Schubert and Rubinstein, together with some of the old Irish and German Lieder of which he is a special student. But Dr. Watson quickly followed the lead of our enthusiastic friends with the first of the four meetings of his Vocal Society, now enlarged to a choir of about fifty voices, well balanced and singing with evident enjoyment of the music and with the appreciation and finish gained during its twenty-eight past seasons. Although the performances of this Society appeal chiefly to lovers of choral music, yet the Concerts afford opportunities for the encouragement of local talent; and in the Sullivan "Te Deum" Miss Herod displayed a clear soprano voice of quite sufficient power and increasing steadiness. That the whole work fell rather coldly upon the audience was not in the slightest degree the fault of the soloists, of the choir, or of the Conductor.

Mr. Pyne, in addition to the customary Saturday evening organ performances at the Town Hall, gives a conditional offer of Recitals on Tuesday evenings, which ought to attract many people who generally have some other engagement on the last night of the week.

But, at the moment when I write, we are rather looking forward to good things to come than excited by reminiscences of what has already been achieved. We have a multiplicity of announcements of interesting events to be crowded into the closing week of October, including the annual visit, on the 23rd, of Madame Patti for the inauguration of the Subscription Concerts which, in conjunction with Messrs. Hime and Addison of this city, the Messrs. Harrison direct; the Pianoforte Recital of M. de Greef on the following evening, under the auspices of Messrs. Forsyth Brothers; the Richter Orchestra, with Mr. Edward Lloyd, on the 25th; and, on the 26th, the first of the new series of Saturday Popular Concerts, under the conductorship of Mr. Speelmann, who will bring a matured experience to bear upon an undertaking which ought, long ago, to have been essayed.

Sir Charles Hallé's season, as usual, commences on the last Thursday in October. Added to its other attractions, great interest attaches to the first public appearance among us of Mr. Brodsky, who replaces at our Royal College of Music so thorough a favourite as Mr. Willy Hess, who has forsaken Manchester for Cologne, but will, we believe, visit us not infrequently. Mr. Brodsky will play Mendelssohn's ever welcome Violin Concerto, and his Continental reputation warrants the highest hope of his success.

On the 2nd inst. Mr. G. W. Lane will, with the Philharmonic Choir, a large band, and tried soloists, give a Recital of Gounod's "Faust," with costume and action.

The Directors of the "Gentlemen's Concerts" expect that the efforts they are making will re-kindle much of the old attachment to the most venerable of our musical institutions. They have not only enlisted the social assistance of a large committee of influential ladies, but they have secured the services of a number of artists of the highest eminence, confident that the reminiscences which cling to their concert-hall and to the delight of past evenings spent therein must once more draw together a sufficient number of subscribers. It is to be hoped that their sanguine expectations may be realised.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE first Concert of the seventh season of the Meakin Popular Concerts was held on the 7th ult., when a crowded audience once more evinced their appreciation of the efforts of Mr. Barlow to provide a popular programme. An orchestra of thirty-eight performers—with Mr. Fred. Ward as principal violin—under the direction of Dr. Swinnerton Heap, supplied the principal pieces, eliciting the warm approval of the audience. Mr. Bantock Pierpoint was the soloist, and sang with stirring effect Dr. Heap's "The Battle of Stirling." On every hand we have promise of a very successful season.

The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company presented its favourite works at Hanley Theatre Royal, on the 7th ult. and the five succeeding evenings. "Tannhäuser" alone drew a crowded house, and the performance was the best of the "Opera" week.

During the following week D'Oyley Carte's Company visited the same theatre with the well-known Gilbert-Sullivan productions.

M. de Greef, the Belgian pianist, met with a hearty reception on the 12th ult., at the Victoria Hall, Hanley.

Dr. Heap has resumed his conductorship of the North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society, and a strong effort will be made to wipe out the adverse balance during this season.

A preliminary meeting of the Triennial Festival Committee has been held, and the preparations for the Festival of 1896 will be announced in a few weeks.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE principal musical events of the past month have been the Concerts of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society, on the 25th ult., and the Sunderland Philharmonic Society. The former consisted of a Recital of vocal and pianoforte music by Messrs. Plunket Greene and Leonard Borwick, and for the latter a miscellaneous programme was presented, with Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Meredith Elliott, Mr. Charles Chiley, and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies as principal vocalists, and Herr Felix Dreyshock as solo pianist. The choral numbers were the following: "Woodland Echoes," by Edgar Pettman; "Twilight," by C. Francis Lloyd; "Thine am I, dearest," by Monteverde; "Resting," by F. H. Cowen; and "From all that dwell," by T. A. Walmisley. Mr. N. Kilburn conducted as usual.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society announces for its second Concert, on December 16, a programme made up largely from the works of Wagner, including the Holy Grail scene from "Parsifal." The vocalists will be Madame Marie Duma and Mr. David Bispham. The programme will also include Somervell's "The forsaken Merman" (produced at the recent Leeds Festival), "O sing unto the Lord," by Henry Purcell; and a new cantata, by Mr. Kilburn, entitled "By the Waters of Babylon." For its third Concert, on March 10, this Society will perform Mendelssohn's "Athalie" and other works.

The Gateshead Choral Society is busy rehearsing Handel's "Israel in Egypt."

Dr. Rea's Amateur Vocal Society is rehearsing Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch," and the South Shields Choral Society is rehearsing Goring Thomas's "The Sun Worshipers" and Sullivan's "On Shore and Sea."

Particulars of the doings of other societies have not yet come to hand, but they will receive attention in due course.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE musical season in Nottingham opens with much promise, but not without disappointments that call for regret. As yet there is no sign from the committee of the Drawing-room Concerts, who have catered so earnestly and successfully in the past for the lovers of chamber music, nor from Mr. William Allen, whose self-denying efforts in the same line seem to be at an end. The Philharmonic Choir, though not disbanded, is not announcing any Concerts, and many will miss its delightful interpretations of unaccompanied choral music. Herr Richter brought his famed orchestra on the 22nd ult., and gave a strong programme of Wagner's music and Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, Mr. Edward Lloyd contributing vocal selections from "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger."

The season actually commenced on the 14th ult., with a Pianoforte Recital by M. de Greef, the Belgian virtuoso, at the Albert Hall.

The Harrison Concerts opened their second series at the Albert Hall, on the 18th ult., when Madame Adelina Patti appeared; Madame Belle Cole, Messrs. Hirwen Jones and Douglas Powell also sang. To many an additional interest was imparted to this Concert by the pianoforte solos of Mr. Frederick Dawson, who is justly a favourite here.

Before these lines appear the Sacred Harmonic Society will have commenced its fortieth season with a Recital of Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," the solos being entrusted to Madame Ella Russell, Miss Lilian Hovey, Mr. James Leyland, Mr. Dunkerton, Mr. Dan Price, and Mr. Andrew Black. The Concert will be directed by Sir Charles Hallé, whose celebrated orchestra will take part.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

THE past month has witnessed an attempt to establish a Musical Festival in Sheffield, which may have far-reaching results in the musical development of the city. The working of the initial stages of the enterprise are of interest in view of the fact that the method adopted has proved eminently successful, and will probably result in the establishment of a triennial Festival. The idea has long been suggested by musicians who recognised the splendid musical possibilities of Sheffield and district; but the first active steps were taken by the members of the St. Cecilia Choral Society, conducted by Mr. William Brown, a flourishing organisation giving regular performances in the Albert Hall. Invitations were sent out to the committees of various local and district societies to meet and discuss the possibility of forming an associated chorus. The meeting took place, and, though some societies held aloof, a very admirable body of singers was got together. Negotiations almost broke down on the question of choosing a conductor, but the difficulty was surmounted by the arrangement that the conductors of the several societies taking part should occupy the post in turn. This is the weak part of the scheme, and a more satisfactory plan will no doubt be found. Dr. Coward, one of the most successful of local conductors, was elected to direct the first performance, and to his efforts much of the success achieved was due. A guarantee fund was next formed and the expenses were soon covered. Nearly all the participants gave their services, and the proceeds of the venture have been handed over to the medical charities of the city. In order to test the feasibility of the scheme only one Concert was decided upon, "Elijah" being the work chosen. The performance took place on the 10th ult. and was an unqualified success. The singing of the chorus of 280 voices was probably the finest ever heard in the district, and an excellent orchestra of fifty performers, led by Mr. John Peck, played the score in praiseworthy style. The principals were Miss Medora Henson, Miss Edith Leslie, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. R. E. Miles. Mr. J. W. Phillips was the organist. It may be stated that a representative meeting of leading citizens is about to be convened to follow up the success already attained, and to endeavour to establish the scheme on a sound financial and musical basis.

A new sacred cantata, entitled "Heroes of Faith," composed by Dr. Coward, was performed for the first time in Weston Street Chapel, Sheffield, on September 30. In scope the cantata is less pretentious than the same composer's "Story of Bethany" or "The King's Error," being mainly intended for the use of small choral societies and church or chapel choirs. For this purpose it is admirably suited, being written in a bright melodious style, and yet sufficiently difficult to be worth careful preparation. The solos were sung by members of the Society. Mr. Jessop officiated as organist, and Dr. Coward conducted.

The first of the Harrison Concerts, with Madame Patti, took place on the 4th ult.

Mr. Slivinski gave a successful Pianoforte Recital in the Montgomery Hall on the 8th ult., and three days later Mr. de Greef played to a large audience in the Albert Hall.

Organ Recitals have been given during the month at the Albert Hall and various churches by Mr. J. W. Phillips, Mr. J. A. Rodgers, and Mr. J. C. V. Stacey.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

WITH the Leeds Festival the season's music in Yorkshire may be said to have begun. The only fault that can be found with so brilliant a beginning is that it not only makes more humble efforts seem somewhat tame by comparison, but tends to exhaust the soil of musical activity for the time being, and to render the ordinary crops less productive. This is, of course, most noticeable at Leeds, and it is not surprising to find that the prospectus of the Subscription Concerts show signs of a spirit of caution, only one of the four Concerts being of orchestral music, instead of the two usually given. For the rest the programme is as unexceptionable as ever, the nearest approach to a concession to sensationalism being the engagement of such virtuosi as Messrs. Burmester and Frederick Dawson. The Leeds Philharmonic Society, on the other hand, shows a spirit of enterprise that is the more remarkable since it is labouring under the depressing influence of a large deficit and, more serious still, of the loss of its able and enthusiastic head, Mr. Alfred Broughton. In his place the committee have invited Mr. A. Beyschlag to undertake the conductorship of the Concerts for the present season. Stanford's "Revenge," Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," and Sullivan's "Golden Legend" are among the more important works the Society has in preparation; but the most interesting event of the season will be a revival of Handel's "Solomon," which was, apart from the strictures justly passed upon Sir Michael Costa's additions to the score, performed with much success at the Leeds Festival of 1877. At Bradford the Subscription Concerts will include, for the first time at Bradford, performances of Goring Thomas's Birmingham cantata "The Swan and the Skylark" and Saint-Saëns's "Samson et Dalila." In these works the chorus of the Bradford Festival Choral Society will take part, besides preparing, for its own Concerts, some of the more stereotyped oratorios. The Bradford Old Choral Society promises "Walpurgis Night" and "Israel in Egypt" as the chief attractions of a distinctly conservative programme. The Huddersfield Choral Society, though it can boast of the strongest chorus of even the West Riding, is sadly hampered by reactionary councils. The nearest approach to freshness in its programme for the season is Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride"; for the rest, the epithet "crusted" is not out of place. The apparently insurmountable difficulty in the way of adequate performances of modern music by our choral societies is the orchestra, which seldom, if ever, approaches the level of the chorus. This has been met by the Halifax Choral Society by engaging Sir Charles Hallé's band for one of its Concerts, when some modern work is generally chosen for performance. This year the choice has fallen upon Gade's "Psyche," which will therefore have a chance of being adequately given. The Dewsbury Choral Society is, for the size of the town, one of the most enterprising in Yorkshire. Beginning the season with a sop to the Cerberus of local Philistinism in the shape of a popular miscellaneous Concert, they make amends by ending with Dr. Parry's oratorio "Judith." The Musical Union at Middlesbrough, which, like the Dewsbury Society, is under amateur conductorship, shows an equally energetic spirit. A programme consisting largely of Wagner selections, of which the "Grail" Scene from "Parsifal" is the most important, will tax the resources of the Society, while the tendency it has always shown of keeping abreast with contemporary English music is evidenced by the inclusion of Mr. Somervell's "Forsaken Merman," only just produced at the Leeds Festival. Speaking generally, the other innumerable choral societies of the county seem inclined to rest on their oars and content themselves with the most familiar oratorios and cantatas.

Coming to what has already been done, Bradford deserves the place of honour for the exceptionally interesting and highly successful Concert with which the Bradford Permanent Orchestra began its season. So deserving a Society as this has in the past found little difficulty in enlisting the active sympathies of prominent musicians; and in securing the generous assistance of Sir Arthur Sullivan the success of its opening Concert, on the 12th ult., was ensured. Sir Arthur Sullivan conducted the entire Concert, the programme of which was made up of his own compositions, including examples of oratorio, symphony, cantata, opera, concert-overture, incidental theatre music, part-song, and ballad—everything, in short, save the comic operas with which his name is most widely associated. Perhaps the appearance of "The Mikado" and "The Light of the World" in the same programme was thought incongruous—at any rate, the transition would hardly have been more abrupt than from "Weep ye not for the dead" to "Ho, jolly Jenkin." It must be said, however, that the programme was thoroughly representative, was admirably arranged, and erred on the safe side of brevity. The magic name of Sullivan attracted the largest audience ever known at these Concerts, and probably something like three thousand people were present to cheer to the echo the most popular of living composers. That the Society was not ungrateful for the service thus rendered was shown by the presentation of an expensive and elaborate silver claret jug and salver that took place after the Concert. Sir Arthur Sullivan acknowledged the gift in a very happy speech, in which he showed his appreciation for the work of the Society and his strong sympathy with English musicians. "In spite of all temptations he remains an Englishman." Other Yorkshire Concerts may be passed over very briefly. The Huddersfield Subscription Concerts began, in "miscellaneous" fashion, on September 24, and were continued on the 8th ult. with a Pianoforte Recital by Mr. Sauer, who also appeared on the following evening at one of Messrs. Haddock's Leeds musical evenings. On the 21st ult. Madame Patti was the star of the third Huddersfield Subscription Concert, and attracted the usual excited crowd of admirers. The Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society opened its season on the 15th ult. with a Concert devoted almost exclusively to the works of Sir Henry Bishop. The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company visited Bradford during the week beginning on the 14th ult., and proceeded to Leeds for a fortnight's stay on the 21st. Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," in which Mr. Ludwig resumes the part he took in London in 1882, Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel," and Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Ivanhoe" are the most important works they have produced.

On the 19th ult. the Yorkshire section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians held its Annual Meeting at Bradford. After the ordinary business meeting a paper was read by Mr. Herbert Thompson, on "Musical Criticism," and Mr. Macdonald Smith gave his Lecture, "From Brain to Keyboard."

MUSIC IN PARIS.

ON the 3rd ult. the Opéra Comique gave the first signal of the resumption of the musical season by the production of M. Massenet's "La Navarraise." This is the first time that the opera has been heard here. It is not necessary for us to criticise this work, which has recently been performed almost everywhere. The public appeared to appreciate the work very much, and the general criticism was, on the whole, favourable to it; although some of the critics insinuated that the composer had allowed himself to be influenced by the success of "Cavalleria Rusticana." However this may be, M. Massenet's short and stirring work was the occasion of a veritable triumph for Madame Calvé. This accomplished artist will shortly leave here on a visit to America. Several novelties are announced for production at the Opéra Comique. Amongst others there will be M. Dubois's "Xavière," which will be performed about the 15th inst., and Lalo's "La Jacquerie," which work has been completed by M. Coquard. Preparations are being made for the revival of Gluck's "Orphée," and probably "Der Freischütz" will also be given. M. Messager has just put the finishing touches to an opera for production at this theatre, entitled "Le Chevalier d'Harmant." At the Opéra, on the 9th ult., "Thaïs" was revived, on the occasion of Madame Sanderson's re-appearance. It is expected that Saint-Saëns's "Frédérigo" will be performed about the end of this month.

The principal concert-givers are preparing for a very important season. M. Colonne was the first to start a series of Concerts, and he has promised us many novelties, for which he has earned the thanks of all music-lovers. His first Concert, which took place on the 13th ult., possessed many attractive features. The names of M. Sarasate and Madame Berthe Marx-Goldschmidt figured in the programme, and the "Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune," by M. Mallarmé, the music by M. Debussy, was produced for the first time. M. Mallarmé, the writer of the libretto, has produced a regular succession of "bons mots," and this style of literature has gained for him numerous admirers. M. Debussy is an interesting composer, whose aversion to the commonplace might easily lead him into dangerous paths. It goes without saying that the artists mentioned above, together with the eminent conductor, were entirely a success in their respective capacities. At M. Colonne's second Concert, which was held on the 20th ult., the Second Concerto for pianoforte, by B. Godard, was heard for the first time. The young pianist, Mlle. Chrétien, acquitted herself creditably in her performance of the work, which is somewhat monotonous in character. The Concerto is well adapted for pianoforte playing, but the form and themes appeared somewhat uninteresting to the public after the charm of Grieg's Concerto.

M. Lamoureux gave his first Concert on the 20th ult. An organ has been placed in the Salle du Cirque for the performance of Handel's oratorios, and we shall anticipate hearing some good things this winter since, as is well known, everything is so admirably arranged under M. Lamoureux's management. At this first Concert M. Sylvio Lazzari's "Prélude d'Armor" was performed for the first time. This gentleman is a young Austrian composer. The work is essentially modern and is well written, but it savours a little too much of that school in which true music is sacrificed in the endeavour to obtain originality. It need hardly be said that the other numbers in the programme were adequately performed, Goldmark's Overture to "Sapho" and Chabrier's Overture to "Gwendoline" calling for special mention.

The Sunday Concerts at the Opéra will commence either on the 17th or 24th of this month. At the first Concert one of the sections will be devoted to old dances. M. Bruneau, author of "Le Rêve" and of "l'Attaque du Moulin," has been entrusted with the post of musical critic to the Figaro. This gentleman, whom the English public know as a composer, is also a distinguished critic. M. Marsick, the celebrated violinist, is leaving here for America, where he will give a series of Concerts. M. Gustave Robert has written a little book, entitled "La Musique à Paris," 1894-95. It is a complete recapitulation of the last concert season with the criticisms, and with a list of all the programmes; it is an interesting work to read, and it will be very useful if continued each year. It is to be hoped that M. Robert may do the same work in connection with the Chamber Concerts. Le Ménestrel, dated September 27, included a long article signed "Berggruen sur les Bardes et Druides Gallois," with two portraits by Professor Herkomer.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

THE stir of activity in the musical world of New York is now fairly begun, and since last writing a small advance guard of Concerts and one or two operatic presentations have occurred. The most important of the former were the two Wagnerian Concerts given during the last days of September at the Madison Square Garden. These served to bring once more before the New York public Mr. Adolph Neuendorff, who held the bâton over a band of 100 men, and was assisted by his wife, Madame von Januschowsky. Musically, the Concerts were hardly successful, the band proving quite unable to cope with the impossible acoustics of the great building, which damaged performances that in a better auditorium would have doubtless been quite satisfactory.

Of the presentation of Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" it is yet rather too early to speak. Only one or two performances have been given, and criticisms of the manner in which the work has been sung and played have been numerous and severe. The general opinion seems to be that an accurate judgment upon its merits can hardly be pronounced until it is better performed than it has been up to this time.

"The Wizard of the Nile," a comic opera, for which Mr. Victor Herbert has provided the music, has made its début in Pittsburgh, and has met with good success. It is making its maiden journey through the West, and will not be presented in New York for some two or more months to come.

The first of the Sunday Popular Concerts, by the Symphony Society, was given at Carnegie Hall on the 6th ult. The soloists were Miss Lillian Blauvelt (soprano) and M. Edward Remenyi.

A new Choral Society has been formed in New York, principally by those residing in the northern portion of the city (Harlem). The new organisation starts out with serious aims, announcing that it will devote itself to oratorio and the larger forms of choral composition. Many influential residents of the Harlem quarter have taken hold of the enterprise, and it bids fair to cut a considerable figure in musical affairs. Three Concerts are announced for the coming season. The Society has called to its leadership Mr. Samuel A. Baldwin, who has hitherto been the conductor of the choral associations of the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis (Minnesota), where his work is said to have been highly successful.

The New York Chorus Society, which was formed late last season under the direction of Mr. Frank G. Dossert, will also be in the field. This organisation gave but one Concert last season, at which Dr. Dvorák's "American Flag" was presented. The Society then evinced signs of good material and efficient training, and this year it proposes to take a somewhat new departure by offering prizes for choral works to composers resident here. The compositions selected will be performed by the Society.

While the coming season of opera promises to be one of the most notable which the city of New York has ever known, the concert season bids fair to rival it in number, richness, and variety of performances. The programmes of the Philharmonic Society show six Concerts. The novelties which are to be brought forward at these will be an Orchestral Rondo by Richard Strauss, G. W. Chadwick's "Melpomene" Overture, an Overture called "From the Scotch Highlands," by F. Lamond; and the pantomime music from "Hänsel und Gretel."

The Symphony Society will give five Concerts, and among the more especially interesting numbers will be a ballet suite by Rameau and some selections from an opera by Richard Strauss.

In addition to these, Mr. Theodore Thomas will visit New York for a series of seven Concerts, to be given at the Metropolitan Opera House, by his Chicago orchestra. This band will number eighty men, and a guarantee fund of 14,000 dollars which Mr. Thomas required to secure the financial outcome of the enterprise has been raised. It is rumoured that at one of these performances Mr. Rafael Joseffy, who has not been heard on the Concert stage for a long time, will make a re-appearance.

Possibly the most interesting work promised by the Oratorio Society of New York is Mr. Georg Henschel's "Stabat Mater," which will be given at the last Concert of the season, April 25. Mr. Henschel is to be present to conduct his work, and he and his wife will sing in a number of Concerts of the larger order and will also, it is said, give some Song Recitals.

During the summer the Post Office authorities in Montreal were successful in one or two instances in frustrating the attempts of persons who are doing a large illicit trade in Canada in shipping reprints of valuable music to the United States, thereby infringing the Copyright Act. Six large sacks which had been sent by express from Toronto to Montreal were mailed at the latter city with a view to eluding the customs officials. "The mail was placed in six bags by local officials, sealed, and mailed to the United States office at St. Alban's, Vermont. Here the mail was found to be contraband, and was seized. The contents were valued at 5,000 dollars. Since the action of the Montreal authorities in the matter, the shippers have been sending these reprints of music to other points in Canadian territory by express from Toronto. On arrival the matter is mailed. So as to avoid the Montreal postal authorities, the shippers have been working on Sherbrooke Post Office and other important points near the lines. The Canadian authorities have aided the United States officials considerably in unearthing this means of defrauding the United States and breaking the Copyright Act of the country. It is estimated that many thousand dollars' worth of reprints of valuable American music have found their way into the United States from Canada."

MR. GORDON TANNER, a very promising young English violinist, gave a successful Chamber Concert, on the 1st ult., at Princes' Hall. Mr. Tanner played Señor Sarasate's Fantasia on Gounod's "Faust," and other pieces by Godard, Zarzkycki, and Bazzini with admirable expression and due brilliancy, and also gave an excellent rendering of the violin part in Grieg's beautiful Sonata in F (Op. 8). The pianoforte part in this work was played with some skill by M. Sigismond de Seyfried, a Polish pianist, who was announced as making his first appearance in London on this occasion, but who in subsequent solos for his instrument failed to make much impression. The services of Mr. Adolph Schmid, an able violoncellist, were employed in the interpretations of Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 1, No. 3) and Gade's Trio in A minor (Op. 29). Mr. Spencer Lorraine was the accompanist.

The committee of the Bayreuth Festspiele have now definitely fixed the dates of next year's representations, which will mark the twentieth anniversary of their original institution. As was the case in 1876, the "Nibelungen" Tetralogy will be given, with entirely new scenery and costumes, under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter. There will be five performances in all of the gigantic work, each taking place on four consecutive days—viz., the first between July 19 and 22; the second, July 26 to 29; the third, August 2 to 5; the fourth, August 9 to 12; and the final one, August 16 to 19. Among the artists who will take part are the brothers De Reszke, Miss Margaret Macintyre, and Miss Brema, other engagements being still pending. No representations of "Parsifal" will take place.

THE Students' Concerts at the Royal College of Music were resumed on the 23rd ult., when praiseworthy performances were given of Brahms's First Sextet in B flat (Op. 18) and Dvorák's Quartet in F (Op. 96), the former being led with spirit and decision by Miss Marie Motto, and the latter by Miss Otie Chew. Miss Ada Walter showed promise as a pianist in a meritorious interpretation of Schumann's "Carnaval;" and Miss Ena Bedford and Mr. Emlyn Davies, both the possessors of voices of fine quality, sang "Crudel per ch'è finora," from Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro," in a manner that gave most satisfactory evidence of the excellence of their training. Miss Morfydd Williams may also be encouraged to pursue her vocal studies.

MR. ERNEST FOWLES'S British Chamber Music Concerts will be continued in the course of the present season. Several new or unknown works will be given, including some violin pieces by Sir A. C. Mackenzie, a pianoforte sonata by Professor Stanford; "Home Scenes," for pianoforte alone, by John Francis Barnett; "Theme varied in three movements," for pianoforte alone, by Arthur O'Leary; pianoforte quartets by Algernon Ashton and Charles Wood, a pianoforte trio by Sydney P. Waddington, a new work by F. Kilvington Hattersley, a new pianoforte trio by Rosalind F. Ellicott, &c.

THE Highbury Philharmonic Society has issued an attractive prospectus for its eighteenth season, the first Concert of which is announced for the 19th inst., when the programme will consist of Gluck's "Orfeo" and Professor Stanford's choral ballad "The Revenge." The works chosen for subsequent performance are Dvorák's "Stabat Mater" and Symphony "From the New World," Max Bruch's cantata "Fair Ellen," Mendelssohn's "Lauda Zion," and Bizet's "Carmen." Mr. G. H. Betjemann will conduct as in previous years.

WE are requested to call the attention of former students of the Royal Academy of Music to the fact that the R.A.M. Club has now a local habitation as well as a name, and offers solid advantages to its members in return for a very modest subscription. All those who preserve a kindly regard for the old Institution—and who does not?—are cordially invited to join the Club, full particulars of which they may obtain from the Secretary, Mr. Percy Baker, Willersley House, Wellington Road, Old Charlton.

An important biography of Richard Wagner, from the pen of Mr. Houston Stewart Chamberlain, is about to be published by the Verlaganstalt für Kunst und Wissenschaft, in Munich. The work, which will contain numerous illustrations by well known artists, promises to be specially interesting on account of its author having had full access to the private archives of the Bayreuth master at the villa "Wahnfried." The publication will be in German.

A SOCIETY for the cultivation and practice of vocal and instrumental music has been formed, the moving spirit of which is Mr. J. H. Bonawitz. It will be called "The Mozart Society," but will not restrict its programmes to the works of the master whose name it bears. The meetings are to be held on Saturdays at 3, at Morley Hall, Regent Street, from November 9 to December 14 and from February 15 to March 21.

THE Royal Academy of Music has received from the Treasury the sum of £500, being the annual Government Grant to the funds of the Institution; the Queen has been pleased to transmit 100 guineas, being the amount which Her Majesty has graciously contributed to the funds of the Institution since her accession; and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has also forwarded his annual subscription to the Academy.

IN recognition of Dr. F. J. Sawyer's valuable services as honorary Conductor during twelve years to the Brighton and Hove Choral and Orchestral Society, a complimentary Benefit Concert will be given to him in the Dome, Royal Pavilion, on the 2nd inst., when Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Professor J. F. Bridge, and Dr. C. Hubert H. Parry will conduct selections from their own works.

MR. JOSEPH IVIMEY'S Popular Chamber Concerts will be resumed at the Assembly Rooms, Surbiton, on the 2nd inst. There will be, as usual, eight Concerts, and the second Concert, on the 16th inst., will be the fiftieth of the series. A number of popular artists have been engaged, and the series promises to be no less successful than hitherto.

AT the final competition for the Erard Scholarship, which took place on the 17th ult. at the Royal Academy of Music, before Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Mr. Edward Dannreuther, and Mr. Franklin Taylor, the Scholarship was awarded to Stephanie M. H. C. Elzy (of Great Malvern) and the examiners highly commended Gertrude Peppercorn and Vera Margolies.

SIGNOR ROSARIO SCALERO, a violinist, born at Turin in 1870, made a successful début on the 24th ult., at the Queen's Hall. He was heard in Dvorák's Violin Concerto (Op. 53) and in pieces by Bach, Joachim, Saint-Saëns, and other well-known writers, but, as he announces two more Recitals this month, it will be fairer to defer judgment of his abilities until these have been given.

THE twelfth season of the Hampstead Popular Concerts of Chamber Music will commence on the 15th inst., at the Vestry Hall. The programmes of these Concerts, it will be remembered, are based on the lines of the Monday Popular Concerts, and the engagements include many of the artists who are favourites at those Concerts.

DURING the past month the Sunday Concerts have been resumed at the Albert and Queen's Halls, and at the South Place Institute, Finsbury. Orchestral performances have taken the place of the afternoon Organ Recitals at the Queen's Hall, and, judging by the attendances, the entertainments meet the requirements of a fairly numerous section of the public.

DR. HUBERT PARRY's Ode "Blest Pair of Sirens" will shortly be performed by the Royal College of Music at Naples. The extremely difficult task of translating Milton's lines into Italian without necessitating alterations in the music has been skilfully accomplished by Mr. Visetti. Could not other popular English works be treated in like manner?

THE organ at All Saints', Margaret Street, has lately been re-constructed by Messrs. Norman Bros. and Beard, of Norwich. Considerable alterations, improvements, and additions have been effected. The formal re-opening will take place on Wednesday, the 6th inst., when Mr. W. S. Hoyte will give a Recital at 6 p.m.

MESSRS. HANN'S Chamber Concerts (tenth season) will be given at Brixton Hall on Mondays, the 4th and 18th inst., and December 9. The programmes will include, among other important works, Quartet in B flat (Op. 41), Saint-Saëns, and Sonata (pianoforte and violin) in F (Op. 57), Dvorák.

The Clapham Amateur Orchestral Society, one of the oldest Orchestral Societies in London, announces three Concerts, the first of which will be given on December 14; the South London Orchestral Society resumed its rehearsals at Messrs. Munt's Rooms, Clapham Junction, on the 3rd ult.

THE opening of the winter session of Trinity College, London, took place on the 1st ult., when an inaugural address was delivered by Dr. E. H. Turpin, the Warden of the College. The greater part of the address was devoted to the subject of "Natural Principles and Artistic Methods."

UNDER the auspices of the famous Riedel-Verein, a Handel Festival is to be held, in May next, at Leipzig, when, as on the recent occasion at Mayence, the oratorios "Deborah" and "Hercules" will be performed in Dr. Chrysander's version of the scores.

THE competition for the Holland Scholarship, the winner of which is entitled to one year's free tuition (under Mr. Edwin Holland), was held at Holland's Academy for Voice Production and Singing on September 27. The Scholarship was awarded to Mervyn Dene.

MR. ROWLAND BRIANT was presented, on the 12th ult., with an oak music stool of most original design and workmanship (by Bechstein), also an address, on his retirement from the office of Choirmaster and Organist of Westbourne Park Chapel.

A MUSICAL Society, comprising orchestra and chorus, has been established in Sunderland, under the direction of Mr. Oscar Cohen, and it is proposed to perform during the season Cowen's "Rose Maiden," Gade's "Erl-King," and several orchestral pieces.

THE Woolwich Choral Union announces three Concerts, the first of which will take place on the 25th inst., when Mendelssohn's "Athalie" and selections will be performed. The other works announced are "Elijah" and "The Messiah."

THE organ at Trinity College has, during the long vacation, been rebuilt by Messrs. Hill and Sons, and, on the 10th ult., Mr. F. G. Mitford-Ogborne gave a Recital of original organ compositions of a varied and interesting character.

MADAME D'ALBERT CARREÑO will visit England this month, and Mons. Siloti, the Russian pianist, will be in London in December, when he will play at the Beethoven (Symphony) Concert.

MRS. HAMILTON ROBINSON has been appointed Professor of Singing in King's College (London), Ladies' Department, Kensington Square.

OBITUARY.

WE have to record the death, on the 12th ult., at the Palace, Londonderry, of MRS. CECIL FRANCIS ALEXANDER, wife of the Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, and known throughout the English-speaking world by her numerous hymns. The deceased lady, who was the daughter of Major John Humphreys, of Miltown House, County Tyrone, was born in 1823, and the versatility and sympathetic charm of her pen first became generally known in a collection of her scattered early writings, entitled "Verses for Holy Seasons," published in 1846, with a preface by Dr. Hook. "Hymns for Little Children" appeared two years later, and demonstrated their author's special qualifications in appealing to the young mind. It contained, amongst others, the favourite hymn "There is a green hill far away." Among subsequent collections may be instanced the "Narrative Hymns for Village Schools," the "Hymns Descriptive and Devotional" (in which the author showed herself somewhat less happily inspired), the "Poems on Old Testament subjects," and "Holiday Songs," written for Lady Arthur Hill, by whom they were set to music. Mrs. Alexander was married in 1850, her husband, the present Bishop of Derry, being also an esteemed writer of sacred verse.

MADAME SYDNEY PRATTEN, the distinguished guitar player, whose death occurred at her London residence, on the 10th ult., was a native of Mülheim, on the Rhine, and received her musical instruction from her father, Herr Pelzer, himself a well-known guitarist. When quite a child, Fraulein Josepha Pelzer acquired considerable fame in her native country as a performer on the instrument, and at the age of eight made a successful début at the King's Theatre in the Haymarket, afterwards Her Majesty's. She eventually established herself in Exeter as a teacher, and in 1854 married Mr. Sydney Pratten, for many years leading flute player at the Opera, the Philharmonic, and other Concerts, when she took up her residence in London.

MR. W. G. WOOD, the well-known London organist, who for some little time past had been in ill health, died somewhat suddenly, on September 25, at his residence in Highgate. He had held the position of organist and choirmaster at Highgate School for over ten years and was a professor and examiner at the Royal Academy of Music. A brilliant executant and gifted teacher, Mr. Wood also made himself favourably known as a composer, one of his most recent compositions having been "The Highgate School Song," which has obtained great popularity with the boys of that Institution. The deceased was only about forty years of age.

THE death is announced, at the age of sixty-six, of HARRISON MILLARD, who, during the American Civil War, had a great reputation as a national song writer. In early life he went to Florence as an opera singer, but when the war broke out he enlisted as a private in the Union Army. He was wounded at Chickamauga, and afterwards entered the Civil Service, in which he continued till ten years ago. Of his song "Waiting" a million copies were sold by one American publisher, while "When the tide comes in," "Watching," "The Tear," and many of his sacred tunes are still in favour.

MR. ANDREW MONTAGUE, of Ingmanthorpe Hall, Wetherby, the well-known capitalist, whose death, on the 8th ult., in his eighty-first year, was announced in the press, was, in his unostentatious and retiring way, a great lover and patron of musical art. He was, moreover, associated financially with a season of English opera at the old Olympic Theatre some years ago, and was practically the leaseholder of Covent Garden Theatre.

THE once celebrated French operatic singer, TOUSSAINT EUGÈNE ERNEST MOCKER, died last month at Brunoy, where he had for many years lived in retirement, at the mature age of eighty-four. Born at Lyons, he commenced his career in 1829 as a humble drummer at the Paris Opéra. After going through a course of vocal instruction with Poussard, Mocker was enabled, in a very short time, to make a successful début at the Opéra Comique in "La Fête du village voisin," which brought him in numerous engagements in the French provinces. In 1839 he entered upon a definite engagement at the Opéra Comique, with which institution he remained associated for the remainder of his career, and where he achieved great popularity in some sixty specifically French operas, such as "Le Maçon," "Le Pré aux Clercs," and "La Dame blanche." He was a Professor at the Conservatoire and a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

M. SAMUEL DAVID, for many years musical director at the Paris Synagogue, and a composer of merit, died in that capital on the 3rd ult., aged fifty-eight. A native of Paris, he studied with distinction at the Conservatoire, where he was a pupil of Halévy, and, after a sojourn in Italy (he having obtained the Grand Prix de Rome in 1858), became a much-sought teacher of the art in Paris. His numerous operas and operettas, notably "Mademoiselle Sylvia," "Tu l'as voulu," and "La Fée des Bruyères," met with but qualified success, while his Symphonic Poem "Le Triomphe de la Paix" obtained a distinction in the competition instituted by the Ville de Paris in 1878. He was also the composer of four symphonies, vocal and other compositions, and the author of a useful theoretico-practical work, entitled "L'Art de jouer en mesure."

M. JACQUES MARIE HYACINTHE CHEVALIER, the distinguished sculptor, whose chisel has frequently been employed in the service of musical art, died at Paris last month, at the age of seventy. His most popular work, a medallion representing the apotheosis of Rossini, was unfortunately destroyed in the fire which gutted the old Opéra House, as was also the pendant medallion of Auber. There remain, however, several sculptures from his hand in the foyer of the present Opéra. His son, M. Paul Emile Chevalier, is a musician and able contributor to our Paris contemporary, Le Ménestrel.

FRAU HENRIETTE MÜHLING, a highly esteemed personality in German artistic circles, who, in April last, celebrated her hundredth birthday, died on September 23, at Berlin. An able actress in her younger days, she became the wife of Herr Mühlung, the director successively of the theatres at Cologne, Bonn, and Aix-la-Chapelle, and an intimate friend of the great singers, Sontag and Malibran, in whose theatrical management she took an active interest, he having been, it is said, the first to introduce Meyerbeer's "Les Huguenots" to a German audience. Frau Mühlung, who was also an able translator and adapter of a number of Scribe's comedies, had retained all her faculties, and continued to take a lively interest in matters artistic to the last.

We regret having to record the death, on the 20th ult., of a veteran English artist, Mr. RICHARD M. BLAGROVE, for many years a familiar figure in our principal orchestras as leader of the violas. He belonged to a family of musicians, his father, Mr. R. M. Blagrove, having been a well-known professor—and author of a "System of the Art of playing the Violin"—at Nottingham, while his brother, Henry, was the distinguished violinist, and pupil of Spohr, who died in 1872. Richard entered the Royal Academy of Music in 1837 for four years' study, chiefly under H. Hill, the viola player, and some years later was appointed to the principal professorship of his instrument at that Institution. Other important appointments followed, as a matter of course, notably, on the death of Hill, that of leading viola in the Philharmonic Society's orchestra and at the Three Choirs Festivals, both of which posts he occupied up to the present year. Mr. Blagrove was also an expert performer on the concertina, an instrument which, both in the concert-room and by teaching, he did much to render popular in his time, and obtained for it the recognition of the late Sir George Macfarren, whose Concertina Quintet was written specially for him. He married Miss Freeth, a gifted pianist and teacher, and of late years has been associated, with his three sons, who inherit their parents' talent, in chamber quartet performances of a high order. An amiable and cultured gentleman, an excellent conversationalist on topics connected with English musical history of the century, the deceased (who was in the sixty-ninth year of his age) will be greatly missed by his numerous friends.

On the 12th ult., at Stuttgart, GOTTLIEB KRÜGER, celebrated harpist, for many years member of the Royal Opéra, aged seventy-one.

MISS ETHEL HIRSCHBEIN has been awarded a Mitchell Scholarship for Violin at the Guildhall School of Music.

THE FIRST SAXE-MEININGEN MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—A musical Festival, in the course of which Johannes Brahms accompanied on the pianoforte some of his own four-part songs, had his health drunk by enthusiastic German musicians, and made a speech in returning thanks for it, is assuredly a great rarity. This, however, and much else of high musical interest, has just happened in connection with the first musical Festival of the Duchy of Saxe-Meiningen, held at Meiningen from September 27 to 29.

The programme—headed as it was by three names only, "Bach, Beethoven, Brahms," and carrying out, as it did, the exclusive choice thus implied with absolute literalness—seemed designed in some sort to instal Brahms beside Bach and Beethoven, and perhaps even, by implication, to bar any claim to a like honour which might be put forward on behalf of Wagner. While the music chosen for performance was attractive on this account as well as for its intrinsic merits, the Meiningen Committee were able to announce an exceptionally promising body of executants, and even some instrumentalists of leading European reputation, such as Dr. Joachim, Herr Hausmann (the violoncellist), and Herr Mühlfeld (the clarinet player). The orchestra, numbering ninety performers, was to consist mainly of that of the Meiningen Court Theatre strengthened by contingents from Weimar, Hanover, Coburg, &c. The chorus, of 346 voices, were to come from choral societies in or about Meiningen—an excellent omen, considering the repute of the Thuringian people for musical talent, which goes back even beyond the time at which Bach himself sprang from their stock.

I went to Meiningen with high expectations, and found them so much more than realized that I hope you will allow me to try to give your readers some idea of what were the most salient features in three days of very noteworthy performance. I offer my experiences with the less hesitation because I was unable to learn that the Festival was attended by musical critics accredited by English journals, whose presence would have rendered my intervention uncalled for.

In the course of two Chamber Concerts, Dr. Joachim and Herren Halir, Wirth, and Hausmann played three Quartets of Beethoven (Op. 95, 95, and 180). The same executants, with Herr Bram Eldering, played Brahms's second String Quintet, and, with Herr Mühlfeld, his Clarinet Quintet (Op. 115). Herr Mühlfeld also played, with Herr Eugene d'Albert, Brahms's Sonata for clarinet and pianoforte (Op. 130). It appeared to me that the highest standard of artistic excellence, attainable only under most exceptionally favourable conditions, including the impulse of a common devotion, was reached in these performances. The compositions for strings, in particular, presented an exquisite unity of spirit in the bond of music such as I have never heard equalled.

An Orchestral Concert given on the second night was remarkable for a fine performance, by Herr Eugene d'Albert, of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat. The orchestra did their part in this work with extraordinary perfection, and, more particularly in the Allegro and final Rondo, developed an absolute identity of dashing rhythm and such youthful freshness and fire as completely carried one away. Finally, when it came to the orchestra's turn to place on Brahms's brow their own special garland in the shape of a performance of his first Symphony, they achieved an overwhelming success. Independently of complete technical mastery and a superb body of tone, there was a unanimity of feeling and a glow and passion at work which proved utterly irresistible, and set the audience cheering in uproarious delight.

For the chorus were set down Bach's "Passion" Music (St. Matthew) and his double chorus "Nun ist das Heil," Beethoven's Mass in D, and Brahms's "Triumphlied." They sang these works with unflinching accuracy of intonation, perfect steadiness, excellent light and shade, and admirable precision in taking up difficult leads and tackling awkward intervals without the least sign of wavering or hesitation. I was not unprepared for this in a work so completely a household word in Germany as Bach's great "Passion" Music, but must confess to having been fairly taken by surprise when I found the intractable choral difficulties of Beethoven's Mass in D surmounted with equal completeness and heard the soprano attacking and sustaining the many ruthlessly long-drawn high A's and B flats (A flat and A at English pitch) with a superb energy which held out unflinchingly to the end of the work. These results had, of course, not been attained without correspondingly assiduous preparation. The chorus began their rehearsals, I was told, a whole year beforehand, meeting regularly once a week, and sometimes, from overflowing zeal, on Sunday as well. They were trained in six separate centres, under different instructors; but Herr Fritz Steinbach, Capellmeister to the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, who conducted the whole Festival with extraordinary energy and efficiency, had visited all the outlying sections in order to bring the requisite unity of conception into the work of the entire chorus.

At a well-attended and most cheery subscription supper, which took place after the last Concert, the toast immediately following the health of the Duke was that of the Conductor. Its proposer narrated how "our Steinbach" had originated the idea of holding the Festival, stirred up everybody else, written innumerable letters, and, in fact, made the Festival the success it had been. Herr Steinbach, in replying, modestly assigned to his collaborators large shares in the final result, and then, in touchingly affectionate terms, proposed the health of "our Master, Brahms," whereupon many, especially of the younger convives, left their seats and crowded round the great composer in order to clink glasses with him. What he said in reply to the toast consisted, as far as I was able to hear and understand him, mainly of ingeniously constructed reasons designed to escape having to make a speech at all. He did not, however, sit down without having spoken hearty words of thanks and recognition, nor without having amused his audience by saying that, as Providence had not brought him into the world with so common a patronymic as Schmidt or Müller, he could at least say without vanity that he was the first composer of his name.

The only other noteworthy speech was from Dr. Joachim, who in a few admirably chosen words, at once full of dignity and wholly free from self-consciousness, paid a tribute of high appreciation to the orchestra and chorus. He closed by quoting from Schiller's poem "to artists" the words "Man's dignity is trusted to your hands, preserve ye it." No one could with better right have urged this hehest on younger colleagues than a man whose whole public career has been one long embodiment of it.—I am, Sir, yours truly,

SEDLEY TAYLOR.

Trinity College, Cambridge,

October 4, 1895.

[We had heard, from an English artist present at Meiningen, of the excellent performances given there in connection with the recent Festival, and on that account are all the more glad to publish the letter with which Professor Sedley Taylor has favoured us. It is said that our correspondent, after hearing Beethoven's Mass in the German town, travelled post haste to Leeds to hear it a second time. A comparison of the two renderings from the pen of so competent a critic would be extremely interesting and valuable. We take the opportunity, while thanking Professor Taylor, to suggest that other travellers into regions not visited by English professional critics might do far worse than send us their observations on notable musical doings.—Ed., M.T.]

MR. EDWARD ELGAR has accepted the invitation of the committee of the North Staffordshire Musical Festival to write a new cantata for production at Hanley in October of next year.

DR. VILLIERS STANFORD'S Choral Ode "The Revenge" has been accepted by Herr Siegfried Ochs for performance this autumn by the Berlin Philharmonic Choir.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

BATH.—The fine new organ erected by Messrs. Norman Bros. and Beard, of Norwich, in the Abbey Church, was formally opened by Sir Walter Parratt on the 11th ult., during which day he gave three Recitals on the instrument. The new instrument, which contains fifty-two speaking stops, is excellently situated in the North and South arches, under the tower, the pedal organ being placed on either side of the North transept.

BOLTON.—An effective performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, on the 10th ult., in the Albert Hall, by the Choral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. J. M. Bentley. The title rôle was ably sustained by Mr. John Sandbrook, and the other principal soloists were Miss M. Brown, Miss J. Rankin, and Mr. W. Green, who were assisted by Miss Ramsden, Miss Bentley, Mr. T. Marsh, and Mr. E. Bennett. Mr. F. Ford led the orchestra, and Mr. W. Mullineux presided at the organ.

BRIGHTON.—The Brighton School of Music is to be congratulated on the acquirement of a three-manual organ, recently built by Messrs. Morgan and Smith, in the Athenæum Hall of the Institute. The instrument was formally opened, on September 27, by Dr. Alfred King, who played a selection of music which advantageously displayed the tone and resources of the organ. Pleasing variety was supplied to the programme by the singing of Miss Alice Holman and Mr. Theo. Field, both successful students of the school.

CARDIFF.—At St. German's Church, on the 2nd ult., Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung by the choir, assisted by full orchestra and organ. The solos, &c., were all taken by members of the choir, the singing of the boys being exceptionally good. The orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. E. T. Roberts, gave a very fair rendering of the Symphony, and Mr. T. E. Aylward, at the organ, played with excellent taste. Mr. W. H. Higgins (organist and choirmaster of the church) conducted, and the result of his instruction was apparent in the attack and finish of the chorus.

CHRISTCHURCH.—An Organ Recital was given on the 5th ult., in the Priory Church, by Mr. E. L. Frecey. The programme consisted of pieces by Handel, Mendelssohn, Widor, Bach, H. Smart, Dubois, Rheinberger, Schumann, Haydn, and Batiste. Vocal selections were given by Miss Legge, Miss Walden, and Mr. A. W. Russe.

COVENTRY.—Mr. H. C. Perrin, the organist of St. Michael's Church, gave, on the 17th ult., in the Corn Exchange, a high-class Concert, the principal feature of which was an effective performance of Professor Stanford's fine choral ballad "The Revenge."

CRATHIE.—On the 11th ult. Mr. Ralph Dudge, the organist of the Parish Church, had the honour of playing a selection of pieces on the organ in Crathie Church before the Queen and members of the Royal family.

FAREHAM.—The first of two Concerts announced by the Temperance Choral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. W. G. Hedges, was given on the 9th ult., in the Town Hall. The chief pieces in the programme were a selection from "The Messiah," Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," and the cantata "Daniel," by Messrs. G. F. Root and W. B. Bradbury. Miss Tutte sang the solo part in Mendelssohn's Motet, and the other principal vocalists were Miss M. Niven, Miss Townsend, Miss Pink, Miss F. Shilling, the Rev. G. Corin, Mr. R. Kirkby, and Mr. H. Tutte. The choir, consisting of about fifty voices, was accompanied by the orchestra connected with the Society.

HALIFAX, NOVA SCOTIA.—J. T. Masser's Harvest Cantata, which is well worth the attention of choirs, was finely rendered by the choir of St. Luke's Cathedral on the 3rd ult. Mr. Frank Gatward (organist and choirmaster) presided at the large organ recently built by Messrs. Norman Bros. and Beard, England.

KEIGHLEY.—The fourth annual West Riding Musical Competition, associated with the name of the late Mr. W. H. Summerscales, was held at the Keighley Institute on the 12th ult., when thirty-five competitors entered their names for the three medals and money prizes. Some excellent playing and singing were listened to by a numerous audience of friends and musical enthusiasts, and the awards, which appeared to give general satisfaction, were presented by Mr. Leolin Brigg. Mr. R. H. Moore fulfilled the duties of accompanist in an admirable manner.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.—A Concert was given in Chalmers' Church on August 29, when the choir was assisted by Miss A. Millar, Miss F. Mitchell, Mr. F. Holt, and Mr. J. Brierley, whose singing afforded manifest satisfaction. A string quartet, consisting of Messrs. A. Zelman, jun., Ryder, F. Tate, and C. Harrison, played Beethoven's First Quartet in F (Op. 18), and organ solos were contributed by Mr. W. E. Nott.

MONTREAL, CANADA.—Mr. E. A. Hilton, Organist and Choirmaster of Dominion Square Methodist Church, resumed his monthly Organ Recitals on September 28, when he was assisted by Miss Perego (organist), Messrs. W. E. Wilson, J. H. Smith, Audas, and Charles Kelly (vocalists). Among the organ pieces in a well selected programme were the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and Mendelssohn's First Organ Sonata.

PRESTON.—The Ambulance Society gave a Concert in the Public Hall on the 5th ult. The chief attractions were the performances of the Band of the Carabiniers and the singing of Miss Marjorie Eaton, a vocalist of much promise and ability. Miss Simpson and Mr. Calderbank each sang two songs, Mr. W. Miles recited, and Mr. J. E. Adkins accompanied.

SELATTYN.—During the Harvest Thanksgiving Services, celebrated in St. Mary's Church on the 10th ult., an effective Organ Recital was given by Mr. Frank Pulein, Organist of the Parish Church, Wrexham.

GRADUATED EXERCISES FOR ELEMENTARY CLASSES IN BOTH NOTATIONS.

In the October issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW a series of graduated exercises in both notations were commenced. These exercises will be adapted for use in school and other classes beginning an Autumn course. They will provide not only easy sight singing studies to be done in the class room, but exercises suitable for home study. With blackboard work and an educational method of teaching songs, they will probably suffice for the needs of many school classes, or they will usefully supplement a regular class book.

School songs in both notations, and studies and tests of a more advanced character, will also be given as heretofore in the music section.

LESSONS ON INTERVALS AND THEIR NOMENCLATURE.

The identification and nomenclature of intervals is one of the difficulties of elementary musical theory.

With a view to assist Teachers and Students a set of plain lessons upon this topic were commenced in the October issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW.

The system of naming recommended by the Education Department, the Royal Academy of Music, Trinity College, &c., will be used.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

In accordance with the Decree concerning Church Music, drawn up by the Sacred Congregation of Rites, and approved of by His Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., on the 7th of July, 1894, I have revised this edition of Schubert's Masses.

Article 10 of this Decree says:—"Every piece in which words are found to be omitted, deprived of their meaning, or indis-creetly repeated is forbidden."

Article 11 says:—"It is forbidden to break up into pieces, completely detached, the verses which are necessarily interconnected."

While correcting the omissions which have been made in the text, I have altered the music as little as possible; but in no instance has the Composer's harmony been interfered with.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS. NEW FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS.

* UNA

FOURTH AND FIFTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
OCTOBER 4, 1893"Una' is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

CANTATA FOR ADVENT.

† THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Seventh and Eighth Thousand.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my Soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE
BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

* JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Sixteenth to Twentieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FIFTH AND SIXTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892.

† ISRAEL IN THE
WILDERNESS

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than are to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; cloth, gilt, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, * 7s. 6d.; † 5s. per 100.

THE PURCELL EXHIBITS AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

AMONG the interesting events in connection with the Purcell Commemoration, not the least was the unique exhibition of pictures and music (printed and manuscript) at the British Museum; and as a permanent record of the collection will doubtless be greatly valued, we have much pleasure in placing before our readers the official list, kindly furnished us by Messrs. A. Hughes-Hughes, Barclay Squire, and F. M. O'Donoghue.

MANUSCRIPTS.

MR. PURSELL.—Anthem, "O praise the Lord all ye heathen" (tenor part).

From one of the Durham Cathedral Part-books, commenced in 1664. The latter part, which includes this anthem, was written rather later, probably about the same time as the companion volume (30479), which is dated 1670. So that, if this be Henry Purcell's, it must be a very early composition. [30478]

"Jehova quam multi." Motet for 5 voices. Circ. 1680-83. (Autograph.) [30930, f. 1]

HENRY PURCELL.—"Plung'd in the confines of despair." Hymn for two tenors and bass. Circ. 1680-83. (Autograph.) [30930, f. 3]

From Dr. Patrick's version of Ps 130. [30930, f. 3]
HENRY PURCELL.—No. 1 of the three-part "Fantazias." A.D. 1680. (Autograph.) [30930, f. 71]

HENRY PURCELL.—No. 1 of the four-part "Fantazias." June, 1680. (Autograph.) [30930, f. 67]

FROM Naples I went to Rome, passing en route the famous Benedictine monastery of Monte Cassino, where MSS. of inestimable value are preserved. The day after my arrival in Rome, I attended an afternoon performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" at the Teatro Nazionale. The performance itself was infinitely better than that at Pisa, but the audience behaved in the same extraordinary way, talking, hooting, hissing, shouting, and singing. This was the last opera I heard in Italy. On the following Sunday I went to High Mass at St. Peter's, which is performed in the "Chorus" Chapel. The voices of the priests were somewhat harsh, but fairly in tune. They gabble the plain-song and get into great jumbles occasionally with it. There was a good choir of about twelve voices in the organ loft, but as the organ was played fortissimo throughout I scarcely heard them. The music was either that of Palestrina or of his date. The organ in this chapel is, however, really a fine one, as I had an opportunity of hearing at a subsequent visit, when some of Guilmant's music was played. I afterwards discovered that there were five organs at St. Peter's, two of which are on wheels.

I went to see the "Pantheon," the entrance hall of an ancient Roman bath, which consists of a dome one foot larger in diameter than that of the reading-room in the British Museum. The building is now used as a church. I did not hear a service there, but noticed that the organ is a small one, mounted on a large platform on wheels.

On my first visit to St. John Lateran there was no service going on, but I noticed that the church, which is of great size and magnificence, contained five organs. There was one on wheels near the West door, a second in a North chapel, two organs facing each other in lofty galleries in the splendid chancel, and one spreading from wall to wall in the South transept. This last was the largest I saw in Italy. I did not hear it. On March 6 I heard some music of Palestrina exceedingly well sung at St. John Lateran, without the organ.

One day I attended a Festival at Sta. Maria sopra Minerva, with choir and organ, but no orchestra. The music was Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," and it was well performed, but the organ interludes rather made one jump—for instance, during the raising of the Host a remarkable jig was played, ending with a brilliant scale worthy of a street piano-organ. The church contains three organs, one on each side of the altar, very high up, and one behind the altar. The last was the one used; it had poor diapasons, a good pedal, and a very disagreeable reed.

At the Church of Sta. Francesca Romana I heard a Festival, in which the music was trivial, and the blows of the conductor on his desk, twice in every bar, rather irritating. Finally I discovered the church at which plain-song and "Palestrina music" are made a special feature. This was Sta. Maria del' Anima, the music for which is supplied by the "Scuola Gregoriana," a German Roman Catholic body; and the service, where not in Latin, is in German. I found here the best organ I had heard in Italy, and the music was splendidly executed. The first Mass I heard in this church was composed by De Witt, a German, in the style of Palestrina, and, as it was Lent, the organ was not used for the Mass.

I had wished to see the Church of St. Philip Neri, to whom is attributed the first beginning of the oratorio. When I got there I found a large church, finely adorned with pictures by Rubens; but a young priest rather sadly told me that I should be able to hear no "Musica sacra" there, as their monastery had been suppressed and turned into Government offices, and they had now no revenues; hence they had no means of keeping up their music, and their church was empty. I afterwards learnt that their musical library, which had contained compositions by Animuccia, specially written for St. Philip, was dispersed. I one day visited the enormous "Gesù," the principal church of the Jesuits, and found a service in progress. The choir, which consisted of men's voices only, was placed in a high gallery, in a transept, and sang well, but was drowned by a very bad organ.

On the Pincian Hill, I heard an excellent performance of a movement of Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and part of "Tristan" by the municipal band. I was told that the new conductor, a great enthusiast, was endeavouring by degrees to teach his audience to appreciate this kind of music.

Being anxious to hear plain-song performed after the manner of the monks of Solesmes, I had made many enquiries in Rome, but could find out nothing about it. At last, to my great delight, I received a post card from Dom Pothier, informing me that it was thus performed at the French Seminary behind the Pantheon. I made my way there accordingly, and with Dom Pothier's card as my introduction, was admitted, and made the acquaintance of several young French priests—and extremely pleasant fellows I found them. Having arranged a time at which I should come to their church to hear a service, I went off to the College of St. Anselm, where I discovered an English Benedictine, who entered very fully into the Solesmes plain-song, and made it all very clear to me. He also gave me a letter of introduction to an Italian priest at the Vatican. On March 19 I went at 9 a.m., by invitation, to the French Seminary to hear the Mass. The effect of about eighty or ninety men's voices, singing the plain-song according to the Solesmes version, was excellent. There was a slight organ accompaniment. There was also about the worst orchestra I ever heard, which accompanied the portions of the music not in plain-song. After Mass was over I presented my letter of introduction at the Vatican, and was invited to a "Saggio" of plain-song in the Solesmes manner, which was about to be performed by the boys of the Vatican Seminary before the Bishop of Padua. I was introduced to the Bishop, a very jovial, pleasant man, and to Father Santi, the choirmaster. We were then all ushered into a schoolroom, at one end of which a number of chairs had been arranged in a semi-circle. In the centre were three arm-chairs, higher than the rest, which I found were intended for the Bishop, an English Abbot, and myself. The master of the Seminary and the rest of the clergy, of whom there was a large number, sat in the lower seats on either side of us. A programme of plain-song pieces, together with some motets of Palestrina and falsi bordoni of Zacharias, was then gone through by the choir, but the effect was considerably marred by the persistent ringing of a bell just outside. Those who have spent any time in Rome will know how constant is the noise from the bells of hundreds of churches, each of which has many services every day.

The choir of the Vatican Seminary consists of boys and men. They were rather new to the Solesmes plain-song, and it was evidently a considerable effort to them; but their performance, though it laboured under this defect, gave me a good idea of how to put in practice the principles laid down by the Benedictines.

I was here told incidentally that the Pope's choir (the Sistine Choir), which never sings with an instrument, occasionally sings Masses with Hucbald's Organum in order to keep up the tradition. There has been much discussion of late as to the traditional method of singing Palestrina's music; and it has been said that this can be heard in Rome. I was told at the Vatican that Mustafa, the former and present director of the Sistine Choir, after a ten years' interval, during which he conducted only modern music, being recalled by the Pope to direct a certain service, was asked whether Palestrina's music should be sung "with expression." He said "No," and stuck to it through the early rehearsals. But before it came to the performance, he had quite changed his opinion, and made the choir sing it with expression. The two methods are amply exemplified in Rome. At St. John Lateran, for example, Palestrina's music is sung throughout fortissimo, while at the German church it is sung with all the lights and shades which occur in modern music. I felt rather inclined to prefer the "traditional" manner, as long as there was plenty of attack and vigour, which certainly was the case at St. John's; but there are excellent points in both manners.

On March 22 I went by appointment to see Herr Müller, the Cantor of Sta. Maria del' Anima, and had a long and interesting discussion with him on the merits of the rival forms of plain-song; and afterwards I went to have a lesson on Pothier's method from one of the French priests. I was constantly struck throughout my stay in Italy with the great kindness and civility I met with from utter strangers, Italian, French, German, or English, to many of whom, such as Herr Müller and several Italians, I had no kind of introduction. This gave a charm to the whole of my tour which I shall never forget.

On March 24 I was again at the Vatican—not in the Seminary this time, but in the Pope's own apartments, with a letter of introduction to Monsignor M., one of his private secretaries. I was of course challenged by the Swiss Guard, but my letter acted as a passport, and I gradually made my way up many flights of stairs and through long passages into the farthest recesses of this huge palace. My object was to try and get an opportunity of hearing the famous Sistine Choir; but Monsignor M. told me that the performances were now so few and far between that I was not likely to get a chance. I had a long conversation with him on church music, and found him most charming. He is a Spaniard, but talks English without the slightest accent.

Having enjoyed my former visit to St. John Lateran, I went again on Sunday, March 27, and had a most remarkable experience. Expecting to hear Palestrina sung by the excellent choir of St. Peter's, what was my astonishment to hear a choir abominably flat, and priests fearfully nasal and out of tune; while the choir had the Florence trick of drawing out the Amens in a quarter-tone instead of a semitone, besides doing their best to start them too flat. The Gradual was sung as a long and trivial operatic tenor solo, the Tractus was a chorus and duet of the same calibre, and the whole affair was so distressing that I soon left and went to the German church for relief to my tortured ears.

Under date March 28, I find in my diary:

con ripetizione ad nauseam.

"This little joke has been going on since about four this morning on the bells of a church close by. I wonder some one does not start a society for the muffling of unnecessary bells."

On March 29 I went to the French church for another lesson, but found my nice little priest ill in bed. He was not very ill, however, for he made lots of jokes and roared with laughter at them.

After a very pleasant visit to Rome, during which I learnt much and saw some few of the wonders of the "Eternal City," I went to Venice. Here my attention was attracted by a copy of Gafurius in the window of M. Olschki, the famous Venetian bookseller and book collector. I went into the shop, and in a few minutes had made friends with him, and he invited me to his private house on the Grand Canal to see his collections of books and maps, which were very interesting, among them being the great Gradual of 1499, the first printed in Venice. It is in three volumes, splendidly preserved, and the printing very fine and of great size. He asked 3,000 francs for the work. On Palm Sunday I went to see the "Blessing of the Psalms," an interesting function, at St. Mark's. The distribution and blessing of the Psalms took place to a kind of simple harmonised plain-song. Then a procession was formed, and the antiphons were sung by a choir of priests to a kind of chant with simple harmonies. They proceeded down the South aisle and out into the porch, the Cantors remaining inside. The doors were closed, and a long musical dialogue took place (the words of which I could not follow) between the processionists outside the door and the two singers inside. The doors were then opened, and the whole company proceeded up the middle of the Cathedral to the high altar, singing another chant. The music was excellently performed. Then two priests, each attended by a palm bearer, entered the two pulpits, one on each side of the choir, and began a long dialogue lasting a whole hour, in very florid plain-song, interspersed with short phrases of about eight bars each, sung by a small but excellent choir of men and boys in the organ loft. These short phrases constantly changed, and the composition seemed from its style to date from about 1700. The chief reciter, he in the south pulpit, on each occasion that he came to a place for the choir or his colleague to respond, sang a flourish from G to C and back—

In spite of the great length of this dialogue, and the fact that I could not follow the words, the singing was so good, and the little phrases by the choir so varied, that I felt no sense of monotony. No instrument was used.

One evening I went with a party of English in a gondola to hear the music on the Grand Canal; but this was a mistake. The various gondolas containing the singers and musicians performed different songs and tunes within hearing of each other; and as, in addition to this, the harmonies were "vamped" and as often wrong as right, I came to the conclusion that the performances were merely intended to extract money and sentiment from the English and American visitors, and were not "in the interest of art." The hat was freely sent round during the performance. I ought to mention, however, that one evening I heard some fishermen singing a three-part song in excellent style, not for money. In the Museo Civico there is a small collection of instruments, the most noticeable of which is a small organ of three stops, with pipes made of paper, by Laurentius Papiensis, dated 1494. It was not in playable condition. M. Olschki gave me an introduction to the librarian of St. Mark's, who showed me some interesting musical MSS. and illuminations.

From Venice I started on my homeward journey, stopping a few hours at Padua. In the Church of San Antonio I found a very fine musical service in progress, performed by a double chorus of men's voices, placed on opposite sides of the church in two of the organ galleries. There are four organs in this church, placed high up on the four corner pillars of the choir. During one of the choruses little bells were vigorously rung in all the chapels by very energetic boys, and the cacophony was terrible. What the object was I could not conceive, for one could distinguish neither the music nor the bells in the fearful din. This was my last musical experience in Italy, which I left that day for England.

FROM MY STUDY.

THIS month THE MUSICAL TIMES portrait gallery is increased by the effigies of two famous public entertainers, who, in their day, gave delight to millions, and never "raised a blush on the cheek of modesty." Such men are among the benefactors of their kind, and deserve to be remembered no less, though for somewhat other reasons, than the masters of serious and lofty art.

John Orlando Parry—that was the full name of the delightful comic artist who, thirty years ago, filled the Gallery of Illustration, night after night, with happy laughter. He was known, however, as John Parry, the public declining to acknowledge Orlando, and as John Parry I will now speak of him. But he must not be confounded with the John Parry who was his father—a purely Welsh product, bandsman, originally, in the Denbighshire Militia, composer, later, of "Jenny Jones," editor of a volume of Welsh melodies, and ultimately, Treasurer of the Royal Society of Musicians. I have styled our John Parry—was he not born in London—1810?—a comic artist, but he could do much other than make folks laugh. Harpist, pianist, singer, organist, teacher, arranger, draughtsman, painter in water-colours—all these parts our hero played at some period of his life, and in all showed a degree as well as a versatility of talent that fairly entitled him to a place among remarkable characters. To some it may be news that he handled the pencil, but evidence that he could use it to some purpose remains in a large Sketch Book, now before me, filled with quaint conceits drawn with spirit and the subtle perception of humour which distinguished him as a musical entertainer. It may be imagined that, in going from one thing to another, Parry was not quite sure where his greatest strength lay. That was undoubtedly the case for some time. He began quite seriously, as a harpist and pianist. Six years later he appeared as a baritone, singing ballads and accompanying himself upon the harp, in the fashion of a true Welsh Bard. This went on till 1836, when even his diffidence and mistrust of self—he had both in excess—gave way to consciousness of more special powers. The result was a revelation to the public. At a concert given for his benefit in June of the year just named, Parry joined Malibran in singing "When a little farm we keep," and presented such an excellent imitation of Harley that the public were delighted. His line being now marked out, Parry settled down as an entertainer. First, however, he appeared upon the stage of St. James's Theatre, where he played in the "Village Coquettes," an opera of the old English type, written by Charles Dickens, with music by John Hullah. I am the fortunate possessor of an original copy of the libretto—for which booksellers, on the rare occasions when an example comes into their hands demand a trifle of thirteen pounds or so—and, on looking into it, I find that "Mr. J. Parry" appeared as Young Benson in very good company. Braham was Squire Norton, Harley played Mr. Martin Stokes, and Miss Rainforth, Lucy Benson. Young Benson is not the most prominent character, but he valourously defends his sister's honour and the credit of his family against the traditional wicked Squire. Fancy John Parry speaking melodrama like this: "After injuring the old man beyond reparation, and embittering the last moments of his life, you may possibly attempt to shield yourself under the paltry excuse that, as a gentleman, you cannot descend to take the consequences from my hand. You shall take them from me, Sir, if I strike you to the earth first." Exit, leaving the Squire to sing a song to himself:

The child and the old man sat alone,
In the quiet, peaceful shade, which somehow does not strike me as an appropriate sequel to an altercation. Young Benson has another sharp interview with the Squire, who serves the family with notice to quit the farm. Then follow a sestet and chorus, Young Benson leading off:

Turn him (Old Benson) from the farm! From his home will you cast
The old man who has tilled it for years!
Ev'ry tree, ev'ry flower is linked with the past,
And a friend of his childhood appears.

Turn him from the farm! O'er its grassy hill-side,
A gay boy, he once loved to range;
His boyhood has fled, and its dear friends are dead,
But these meadows have never known change.

All ends happily, as it should, and Young Benson comes out of the affair with the honours of a manly and generous nature.

John Parry junr?

Parry did not remain on the regular stage. He could do better as a singer of humorous songs, like "Wanted, a Governess," and in that capacity he laboured till 1849, then setting up an entertainment, in the course of which large water-colour drawings, from his own brush, were exhibited. At this time Parry's health began to cause uneasiness, leading, in 1853, to temporary retirement, or, at any rate, to the less nerve-destroying occupation of an organist and teacher. Seven years later, the old favourite of the public was welcomed back, as a member of German Reed's troupe, with which he remained till 1869. The artist's last appearance took place, for his own benefit, at the Gaiety, in 1877. Two years later (February 20, 1879) he made his exit from the stage of life.

Henry Russell is happily still living, and, though withdrawn from public life, takes as much interest in it as ever. He is said (by J. H. D., in Grove's Dictionary) to have been born at Sheerness on Christmas Eve, 1813, which date now gives him the venerable age of four score and two. While yet a boy he studied music in Bologna, and, in 1833, went to New York, where, or in some other distant region, he remained for seven years. In 1840 Russell returned to England and began the labours which were to obtain for him the smiles of Fortune. It is said that he wrote or composed over 800 songs, thus exceeding in number, if not in quality, those of Franz Schubert. To a certain extent Russell was a replica of the minstrel who, in ancient days, stirred the hearts and influenced the actions of his countrymen. He spoke to the masses in language they could all understand, while it is a truism to say that his "I'm afloat," "Cheer, boys, cheer," and others of a like character, were potent incentives to exertion in the specially English task of replenishing the earth and subduing it. As Russell went up and down the country singing these songs he became a force which showed what wisdom and truth are in the remark of Fletcher of Saltoun, or some other sage: "Let me make the country's ballads and I care not who makes the laws." Those of us who have heard Russell sing can recall the strong feeling he exhibited, and understand the moved auditor who, after hearing "Woodman, spare that tree," exclaimed, "And was the tree spared, Sir?" Russell showed, also, a considerable measure of dramatic feeling and force, which he exemplified in such pieces as "The Maniac." He has published two volumes of songs, and is the author of a treatise on the art of singing.

The other day, when rummaging an old bookshop in a Festival town, I came upon, and made mine, a pamphlet in small quarto, time-stained and dilapidated, but entire. It is entitled "The Form and Order of the Coronation of Charles the II., King of Scotland, together with the Sermon then preached by Mr. Robert Dowglas, etc., and the Oath then taken, with several Speeches made. As it was Acted and done at Scoone, the first Day of January, 1651." Three texts of Scripture follow, beginning with, as matters turned out, the exceedingly inappropriate verse: "Then Solomon sate on the throne of the Lord as King, instead of David his father, and prospered and all Israel obeyed him." The imprint has been partially cut off by the shears of some wretched binder, but I read: "Aberdene, Imprinted by James Brown, and reprinted at London and —." There is a reference to this tract in Carlyle's

"Letters and Speeches of Oliver Cromwell," and only a reference, the compiler being busy with what he called a Man and not, as he termed the second Charles, "an Incarnate Solecism." Carlyle also mentions Mr. Robert Dowglas, contemptuously speaking of him as "one Dowglas," although the reverend gentleman was Moderator of the Commission of the General Assembly, and therefore a most potent personage.

Henry Russell

I sat down to inspect my prize with an interest not unconnected with music. It would tell me what part music played (if any) in the highest of State ceremonials, at a time the relation of which to the art is still a matter of dispute. Will the reader be my companion through the dust-soiled pages? But first let us look around us and see how matters stand on this New Year's Day, 1651. Never, perhaps, did a coronation take place under more depressing circumstances. "Dunbar Drove" happened only four months ago; Edinburgh is in the hands of Oliver, Lord General, now living somewhere near the Canongate, waiting for the winter to pass, and the strength of the Covenanters is weakened by dissensions on subtle points of faith or procedure at which, as causes of dissension, we now look with amazement. But the dominant party have their Covenanted King—that is something, not much—and the Scottish forces hold Stirling with the parts adjacent. It is a bold thing to crown young Charles in the very face of the grim, resolute man at Edinburgh yonder, but for the present it is safe. Oliver cannot move till the winter ends, and now let us see the Coronation.

The belated morning of a mid-winter day brings no sound of trumpets and drums. All is silent at "Scoone," as the King's Majesty comes out of his bed-chamber into the Chamber of Presence, where the Lord of Angus invites him to assume the crown and conform to the League and Covenant. Charles declares his willingness to put on the regal emblem, but does not mention the Covenant, which, we know, he detests. This done, a procession is formed and marches to the kirk, certain noble lords bearing with due gravity the spurs (which will be useful at Worcester in some month's time), the sword, the sceptre, and the crown. The King follows, "in a Prince's dress," his train carried by four eldest sons of peers. He walks under a canopy of crimson velvet borne by six earls' sons, and so, with sufficient dignity, "the King's Majesty entereth the Kirk." The record makes no mention of music amid all this show, and we see the royal procession moving silently along through the chill winter air, with faces none too cheerful, for who shall tell how the matter will end? Nor does music ring through the kirk as the illustrious persons enter. The pealing organ never blows in that severe temple of an austere creed, but if the ear have nothing to do, the eye can rest, with such gratification as is possible, upon the countenance of Master Robert Dowglas, who stands in the pulpit charged with the coronation sermon. The poor young man under the velvet canopy cannot escape the sermon. It is the first item in the programme, and Charles is at once escorted to a chair "over against the Minister," who forthwith offers up a prayer, and gives out his text, "And he brought forth the King's son, and put the crown upon him," &c.

(see 2 Kings, c. xi., v. 12, 17). What a sermon! There are 470 words, more or less, on a page, and there are 24 pages, making a total of about 12,000 words—nearly a page of the Daily Telegraph. How the poor young King must fret under that long inflection, the more because much of it is spoken in the "Thou art the man" style of Nathan the prophet. Heavier than a crown even in troublous times is the weight of that tremendous homily. Here is a short extract: "The house of our King hath been much defiled by idolatry (our King hath a Popish Mother, observe), our King is now in Covenant, and, to renew that Covenant, let the Royal Family be reformed. Much hath been spoken of this matter and little hath been done in it. Let the King and others who have charge in that family think it lieth upon them as a duty to purge it." When Master Robert Dowglas sits down, we fancy a little music would have a consolatory effect, but the minstrels are silent; in fact, there are no minstrels. Master Dowglas falls to prayer again; at what length is not stated, but doubtless it was not inconsiderable. The Scotch ministers believed in wearying Heaven.

At this point the coronation ceremony begins. Master Dowglas administers the oath, Charles swearing to many things and subscribing the Covenant very readily, but, we may be sure, with his tongue somewhere near his cheek. "This done, the King's Majesty sitteth down in his chair and repositeth himself a little." Quite right. After the sermon and the oath, a little repose seems needful. Meanwhile there is no music. Now we proceed further in the business. The King is invested with royal robes, girded with the sword, has those useful spurs fastened on by the Earl Marshal, and the crown placed upon his head by the Marquess of Argyle. So arrayed, he receives the homage and oath of all present. There are further ceremonies tedious to recount, and now the King, perhaps, sees a prospect of quick release. If so, he reckons without Master Robert Dowglas. That garrulous divine begins another address, about 900 words; after which the King is shown to the people without, and there are other observances, long-suffering Charles being kissed, for example, by every Scotch nobleman present. At last, the King is left sitting on his throne, with Master Dowglas standing before him. A third time the irrepressible one proceeds to counsel his wretched monarch, going to the extent, this time, of 1,670 words, more or less. But that is really the end of him, save for another prayer and the benediction. Before the benediction, comes music! At last! Master Dowglas "gives out" the twentieth Psalm, but the reporter neglects to mention the metrical version used. I fancy it is not that of the king's estimable grandfather, who, as appears from a passage in the sermon, is scarcely remembered with blessing by the Kirk. It is, however,

Psalm 20, and we lift up our voices together in some such poetic strain as this:

In Chariots some put confidence and some in horses trust,
But we remember God our Lord, that keepeth promise just.
They fall down flat, but we do rise and stand up steadfastly;
Now save and help us, Lord and King, on thee when we do cry.

The Psalm, as events proved, is not less inappropriate than the text. But it is sung all through. To what tune? The reporter is again silent; we may, however, guess that it was not the "Bangor," or some still higher score," which Oliver's triumphant army rolled out on Dunbar field, before taking up the chase.

"Then did the King's Majesty descend from the Stage, with the crown upon his head, and, receiving again the scepter in his hand, returned with the whole Train, in solemn (and silent) manner, to his Palace, the Sword being carried before him." Alas, poor King! That was a show sword, the real working article being behind him in the hand of the man of destiny, who followed to Worcester, where the drama closed in hideous rout and ruin. How curiously fitting was this music-less, melancholy coronation to its circumstances and the quick-coming end!

STEVENSON, THE MUSIC-LOVER.

IT is a curious fact that although so much has been written about the late ever-to-be-regretted R. L. Stevenson, no account has been given, so far as we are aware, of the extent and limits of his musical accomplishments. That he took a lively interest in the art is sufficiently clear from the allusions to it which occur in his books. Music, indeed, plays quite an important part in that extraordinarily brilliant farce "The Wrong Box," in which one of the most humorous situations in the whole story is that of the exposure of the young barrister, who pretends that he is engaged in the composition of an imaginary comic opera, entitled "Orange Pekoe." It is in the same story, again, that there occurs a veritable locus classicus on the art of playing the penny whistle, and the difference between the amateur and the professional performer. Here it is that Stevenson makes the memorable observation that one seldom, if ever, encounters a person learning to play that instrument, or, as he puts it, "the young of the penny whistler, like those of the salmon, are occult from observation." The whole chapter is full of exquisite fooling on this topic, but it is the fooling of a writer who knows what he is talking about. And so we are not surprised to learn, from the recently published "Vailima Letters," that Stevenson was more than merely sympathetically disposed to music; that he played an instrument himself, and that he was peculiarly susceptible to melody and rhythm. Take, for example, this passage, in which he describes how, while out for a walk in the forest, he was surprised by the "sound of a mill-wheel thundering, I thought, close by, yet below me, a huge mill-wheel, yet not going steadily, but with a schottische movement, and at each fresh impetus shaking the mountain." The mysterious mill-wheel, we may add, turned out to be a sharp series of earthquake shocks. In another striking way Stevenson proved himself to be a musician at heart; he hated noise of all sort, and speaks with enthusiasm of the "beautiful silence" of his island home.

But now for Stevenson's instrument. It certainly was not the most noble of the great family of wind instruments, being none other than the somewhat despised flageolet; but let that pass. There can be no doubt, at any rate, of the assiduity with which Stevenson practised upon it. There is hardly one of the earlier letters in which such entries as "played on my pipe," "took to tootling on the flageolet," do not occur. Of his proficiency he speaks with great modesty: "Even my clumsinesses are my joy—my woodcuts, my stumbling on the pipe." And again: "If I take to my pipe"—the context makes it clear he means his flageolet—"I know myself—all is over for the morning." On page 80 we read: "Tell Mrs. S. I have been playing 'Le Chant d'Amour' lately, and have arranged it, after awful trouble, rather prettily for two pipes; and it brought her before me with an effect scarce short of hallucination. I could hear her voice in every note; yet I had forgot the air entirely, and began to pipe it from notes as something new, when I was brought up with a round turn by this reminiscence." The effect which music had upon him was manifestly overwhelming. He says of some engrossing pursuit it "fascinates me like a tune." Here again is a characteristic passage: "Le d  nouement of a long story is nothing . . . it is a coda, not an essential member in the rhythm." Though Stevenson generally "piped" alone, he often took part in concerted music with his stepson and step-daughter, with whom he speaks on page 103. of "making music furiously." On the next page we encounter the following interesting entry: "Woke at usual time, very little work, for I was tired, and had a job for the evening—to write parts for a new instrument, a violin. Lunch, chat, and up to my place to practise; but there was no practising for me—my flageolet was gone wrong, and I had to take it all to pieces, clean it, and put it up again. As this is a most intricate job—the thing dissolves into seventeen separate members, most of these have to be fitted on their individual springs as fine as needles, and sometimes two at once with the springs shoving different ways—it took me till two." Of the subsequent performance he writes: "In the evening our violinist arrived, no great virtuoso truly, but plucky, industrious, and a good reader; and we played five pieces with huge amusement and broke up at nine." When Stevenson went to stop with the Samoan chief, Mataafa, he describes how he was awakened at about four in the morning by the sound of a whistle pipe "blown outside in the dark, very softly and to a pleasing simple air," the first phrase of which he gives in musical notation marked "Andante tranquillo." And when he speaks of his contemplated "Young Chevalier," he says that he means to write it in a different style from "Catriona," with "rather more of a sentimental tremolo" in it. He mentions it as one of his characteristic failings that he never could remember the name of an air, no matter how familiar it was to him. Our last quotation does not strictly relate to music, but it is too good to be missed. Stevenson describes how he went to a ball at Apia, where his political antagonist the Chief Justice also appeared, and presently found himself "in the same set of a quadrille with His Honour. We dance here in Apia a most fearful and wonderful quadrille. I don't know where the devil they fished it from; but it is racy and prancing and embracatory beyond words; perhaps it is best defined in Haggard's expression of a gambado. When I and my great enemy found ourselves involved in the gambol, and crossing hands and kicking up, and being embraced almost in common by large and quite respectable females, we—or I—tried to preserve some rags of dignity, but not for long. The deuce of it is that, personally, I love this man; his eye speaks to me, I am pleased in his society. We exchanged a glance, and then a grin; the man took me in his confidence; and through the remainder of that prance we pranced for each other."

After all—so some readers may object—Stevenson's musicianship does not amount to much. And, as we have seen, he would have been the last person in the world to over-estimate his modest accomplishments. But apart from the fact that everything relating to so gifted and lovable a personality is intensely interesting, it is refreshing to find the faculty of musical appreciativeness developed in a man of letters. We cannot help thinking that Stevenson's fastidiousness in the choice of the "sovereign word" was in great measure due to this sensitiveness to melody and rhythm. Certainly his prose has the real lilt about it, while its elegance and finish prove that whatever his limitations as a musical executant may have been, he had in him the potentialities of a virtuoso. Above all, just because he was an amateur, and knew how little he knew, he never lapsed in his writings into the absurd inaccuracies or the dogmatic partisanship which disfigure the musical allusions of the average novelist. Stevenson never exceeded the bounds of his knowledge in this respect, and would never have been guilty, for example, of the absurd diatribe against Wagner which appears in Mr. du Maurier's "Tribby."

WHEN celebrated conductors betake themselves to publishing criticisms on their confrères, some candid expressions of opinion may be anticipated, and, in accordance with the saying concerning honest folks "getting their right" when certain gentlemen of wide views "fall out and fight," much benefit may accrue to music-lovers, or at least to those of them who read about the art, by the recently published essay by Herr Felix Weingartner upon the ways and doings of some of his colleagues of the bâton. The "metronomic time beater" and "the elegant Mendelssohnian school of conductors, who slur over difficulties with a tempo as quick as possible," fare badly at the writer's pen, as do also the "tempo rubato conductors." The latter he accuses of "personal vanity, so that they are not content to execute a work as the composer intended, but wish to demonstrate to the public what they could make of it had they been in the composer's place. The conductor's desire for applause is placed higher than the genius of the composer." This may be so, but as a matter of fact it is far easier to give an eccentric, or what is euphemistically termed an "individual" reading, than one which faithfully reflects the composer's mind. The former only requires the courage of ignorance, whilst the latter necessitates long and careful study, and a sympathetic intuition possessed by few. Broadly speaking, there is just now too much struggling for "effects" in modern orchestral playing, with proportionate neglect of observance of the different styles of the respective composers. Mozart, Schubert, Beethoven, Wagner are constantly treated in the same spirit, and the impression made that one composer is inferior to the other, rather than the individual merits of each being clearly set forth. It is not enough to have contrasts in the performance of the works themselves, the contrasts must be extended to the different treatment of each work, otherwise variety in the programme is nullified by sameness of conception in interpretation. The conductor who sends forth his audience impressed with a certain mannerism in the renderings has not discharged his duties with faithfulness. Listeners should go away with clear ideas of the individuality and peculiar style of beauty of each masterpiece. There are pianists who bring to the lips the exclamation "what wonderful execution"! There are others whose playing excites admiration for the music they interpret. So is it with conductors. Let them see to it.

In his recently published volume of reminiscences, entitled "Men, Cities, and Events," Mr. Beatty-Kingston gives a circumstantial account of his introduction to Mendelssohn, before whom he played at the age of nine. To mark his appreciation of the boy's effort, Mendelssohn offered to extemporise on any theme which was given to him. Master Beatty-Kingston—we speak retrospectively, bien entendu—accordingly suggested "The Blue Bells of Scotland," and Mendelssohn extemporised some twenty Variations, "each illustrating a special method of subject-treatment or branch of technical proficiency. . . . Amongst other amazing feats, I remember the 'canonisation' of the melody alla seconda and alla settima; two versions differently harmonised, in the minor mood; an inimitable left hand étude in the Chopinesque manner, and a tremendous four-part fugue, with episodic inversion of the subject, leading into a stately chorale, at the close of which Mendelssohn fairly broke out into one of those fanciful, incomparable cadenze in which he notoriously delighted to 'let himself go,' and which may fairly be said to have exhausted the difficulties of pianoforte playing. This paramount achievement, which lasted fully three minutes, culminated in a triumphal March, with which the improvisation closed, and which sounded throughout as though it were being played by four hands instead of two. All the musicians present were unanimous in declaring that they had never theretofore witnessed such a glorious feat of supreme virtuosity." Alas! why were there no phonographs in those days!

Of all the surprising feats of virtuosity that Mr. Beatty-Kingston has witnessed—and he has heard every great European pianist from Thalberg to Paderewski—none has left so indelible an impression upon his memory as that effected by Sterndale Bennett's scale playing in octaves, thirds, and tenths. Of Mr. Beatty-Kingston's own "precocious musicality" we get the following picture: "Arrayed in a velvet jerkin, with a falling lace collar and cut-steel buttons, silk stockings, and silver-buckled shoes, I have sung as a little fair-haired child to Cabinet Ministers, great social magnates, and grandes dames de par le mode by the hundred. My first watch—a tiny, costly toy, which I then regarded as a 'joy for ever'—was given to me by her Royal Highness the late Duchess of Gloucester for singing 'Il mio tesoro' to her, at a grand musical party given by Lady Theresa Lister—I think, during the season of 1844." Mendelssohn kissed him, after hearing him play, and said, "You are a really musical child. Let that be enough for you to know at present. And you may say that Felix Mendelssohn told you so." Later on journalism claimed Mr. Beatty-Kingston for her own, but he always kept up his music, and on one memorable occasion boldly stepped into the breach and took part, at sight, in an arrangement for two pianos of Liszt's "Tasso" with the composer, in such a way as to elicit the master's approbation.

OLD Concert programmes are often interesting and, at the same time, historically valuable. Here is the programme of a Concert, the first of two, announced to be given by "Madame Dulcken (Pianiste to Her Majesty) and Mr. Benedict," in February, 1841. It records that "Between the first and second parts, the celebrated pianist, M. Liszt, will give some of his most admired Recitals." Also that Bach's triple Concerto, for three pianofortes and orchestra, would be performed by Madame Dulcken, Messrs. Benedict and W. S. Bennett. But the most interesting part is to come. In the list of music to be performed at the two Concerts is "A new grand Trio for three pianos, with orchestral accompaniments, composed expressly for this occasion by W. Sterndale Bennett." Unfortunately, owing to lack of support at the first Concert, the second performance did not take place and the "new grand Trio" was not heard. None of Sterndale Bennett's biographers make any mention of this work. Was it ever written down, or even sketched? Can any of the composer's contemporaries throw any light upon so interesting a subject?

MR. GLADSTONE recently sent the following letter to Mr. Algernon S. Rose, in reference to the statement made in the book "Talks with Bandsmen" to the effect that the poet Rogers was unmusical:—"I thank you for your interesting work and letter, and I heartily wish well to your labour in an excellent cause. You may not be displeased to hear that the rumour you have heard about Mr. Rogers and music is, in my belief, unfounded. I knew him well, and I recollect him as a voluntary attendant at the concerts which were given in the Hanover Square Rooms. London was then scantily supplied with music. I think Mr. Rogers really loved it." On this the Daily News remarks: "Rogers not only loved it, as Mr. Gladstone says, but his biographer gives instances of the generosity with which he took others with him to the concerts of which Mr. Gladstone speaks." Nevertheless the Newcastle Chronicle takes an opposite view as follows: "Samuel Rogers . . . may have loved music; but we fail to see that Mr. Gladstone's evidence is conclusive on the point. 'London,' as he remarks, 'was then scantily supplied with music.' This is perfectly true; and it is also true that the concerts in the Hanover Square Rooms were very fashionable gatherings, frequented by people whose social duty it was to be seen everywhere, where the beau monde collected. Rogers was an accomplished man about town, and may have been an habitué of the Hanover Square Rooms in this sense. It is on record that the Duke of Wellington, who could not have detected the difference between 'Yankee Doodle' and Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, and who positively disliked music, also attended the Hanover Square Concerts. He was to be seen there, writes one who remembers him, generally sitting between two pretty women, but looking very much bored while the music was proceeding. Why not also Sam Rogers?" Query: Was Rogers really musical, or not?

The good work which amateurs may do in the cause of art has seldom been made more manifest than in the recent performance of "Antigone" at the Hampstead Conservatoire. In all art there is a class of work which, from its innate refinement, delicacy, and subtlety, can only appeal to the cultured and to those who have some knowledge of the mysteries of craftsmanship. As a consequence such works are avoided by the mere business manager, and thus depend on devotees to be made known and to be enabled to fulfil their mission. Few people realise how great an influence the exposition of a true work of art exercises in its particular branch. Like all potent forces, it convinces in silence, and the path of its spirit can only be traced by the artistic touch found on the coarser production, in the groping after truth by the half-educated craftsman, and in the growth of a more discriminating and higher taste. It is necessary, therefore, that these works of lofty purpose and noble aim should from time to time be brought forth, that the spirit of life in art may be renewed. To do this thing is the privilege and highest function of amateurs. This would seem to have been fully realised by those members of the Irving Dramatic Club who so ably assisted the professional element at the recent production of "Antigone," and the completeness of the representation speaks volumes for the artistic skill and earnestness of purpose of those upon whom the chief responsibility rested.

A CORRESPONDENT forwards to us the prospectus of a new departure in what may be called autobiographic journalism, the way for which has been smoothed by the enormous development of the personal paragraph system, of which we subjoin a characteristic specimen cut from a daily paper of the 21st ult.: "Miss —, who will in a few days return to the — Theatre, has a reputation in the shoe and glove world. She is a dainty, pretty girl, who is averted to wear the smallest boots and gloves." The desire for these thrilling "personalia" is indicated in a leading article in the same journal, in which the writer declares, "We recognise that illustrious personages have a right to have their movements chronicled. We have all a sneaking desire to know all about these details." Have we? Anyhow, a "systematic and organised attempt is to be made to gratify this sneaking desire. The service which the new journal will 'render to the artistic world'—we quote from the prospectus—

Consists in the insertion of paragraphs about their successes, their plans, their movements, their personality, and all such details as may help to keep them prominently before the public. Portraits will also be inserted for the convenience of the press, and information will be supplied with regard to the publication of books, the movements of dramatic companies, the appearances of vocalists, and the commissions of painters. In fact, any item of news or gossip which an artist may desire to make the public acquainted with will be inserted, provided that it is suitable in character. Paragraphs, under no circumstances, will exceed 150 words, and the shorter they are the better suited for their purpose. Annual subscribers of five guineas will be entitled to the publication of one paragraph per week. For eight guineas they can claim two paragraphs per week, and unless under exceptional circumstances this limit will not be exceeded.

We abstain from needless comment on this epoch-making innovation, though we confess it would be interesting to solve the artistic equation of a singer, actor, or painter who found it necessary to his professional salvation to reinforce his appeal to the public by an eight-guinea or 104 paragraph-power subscription to the new journal.

THOUGH disfigured by a certain amount of extravagant hero-worship, the memoir of Mr. Albert Chevalier by Brian Daly (published by John Macquaeen) is not lacking in interest and entertainment. One of the most amusing chapters in the book is that devoted to the correspondence of the Coster's Laureate. Thus a budding author writes: "Dear Sir,—I have taken the liberty of offering you a song that I have put together. This is my first attempt at songs, but I have composed verses for patent medicines and soap advertisements. I have got a tune for the song, but I cannot write music, although I play the piano and banjo pretty well." Another author contributes a poem from which it may suffice to quote the following exquisite couplet:

But her little tongue no more will wag,
I cannot help but feeling sad.

The biographer gives a curious collection of rhymes culled from these "rejected addresses," of which the following are worth quoting: "mimic" and "limit," "moon" and "tomb," "champion" and "vamping."

WITH commendable discretion Mr. Rimington, in his lectures upon and demonstrations of the Art of "Colour Music," made it clear that he had no desire to be regarded as a pioneer, though he claimed to have established the relation of colour and sound on a more intimate footing than any of his predecessors. It is curious, however, to see how far he was forestalled by a French priest, of whose invention the following account is given under the head of "Assimilation of Colours to Musical Sounds" in Vol. I. of Dr. Busby's "Concert Room and Orchestra Anecdotes," published in 1825:—

Lewis Bertrand Castel, a Jesuit of Montpellier, whose "Physical System" ranks amongst the best philosophical works of the early part of the eighteenth century, studied vision and the nature of colours, as blended or contrasted with each other, till his imagination getting the better of his understanding he confounded the eye with the ear and associated the harmony of tints with that of sounds. Infatuated with this idea, he invented what he called an Ocular Harpsichord, which was strung with coloured tapes instead of wires, and being placed in a dark room, when the keys were touched the transparent tapes, which respectively corresponded with them, became visible; and the various successions and combinations of colours, consequent to this operation, produced effects on the sight, which his fancy assimilated to the impressions made on the ear by melody and harmony.

MUFFINS.

Ring out, wild bell! St. James's Hall
Is full of music-loving folks,
Who like your playful little jokes;
Ring out, wild bell, beyond the wall.

Ring as of old, ring yet anew,
Ring, muffin bell, ring so that we May know it's nearly time for tea;
Ring out, ring out till all is blue.

Ring out, nor trouble how you pain
The pianist who plays to us.
What if he stops? A foolish fuss!
Ring out till he goes on again.

Ring out, and tell of festive feast,
Of muffins toasted to a turn;
You stop—but that's not your concern—
Some piece by Schumann or by Liszt.

Ring out, you cannot feel fatigue,
Ring out your noise which nothing calms;
It somehow does not go with Brahms,
Nor does it harmonise with Grieg.

Ring out with clarion sound which tells
Of crumpets, unromantic things,
And down the charmer's voice which sings,
Perhaps about "Those Evening Bells."

Ring out, disturb the peaceful "Pop,"
Or any music you can find;
If disconcerted players mind,
Not you, but they, must simply stop.

Ring out the old, ring in the new—
New year which silent peace may bring,
Just now we almost wish to wring
The neck of him who's ringing you.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

THE Musical Courier laments "an estrangement of arts." Musicians do not patronise the drama, and actors abstain from attending opera and concerts. There is a sub-division about which the Courier might say a good deal. How often do we catch sight of a singer listening to instrumental music? How often, for that matter, do musical artists attend concerts at which they are not engaged? J. W. Davison used to tell a story of Giuglini which is à propos. By great effort, the critic induced the tenor to accompany him to a performance of Beethoven's Sonata in B flat (Op. 109) by Madame Arabella Goddard. Giuglini heard the first movement attentively, applauded, expressed delight, and, thinking it was all over, rose to go. "Stop," cried Davison, "the best is to come." The Adagio was too much, however, for the patience of a man to whom it was probably Greek. He endured to the end of it, smiling through his pain, like a gallant gentleman, and then, for nature has its limits, departed with the words, "Beautiful—but long!"

READERS of a certain provincial journal were informed the other day, in the course of a concert notice, that "Miss Grace Woodward's appearance in a rich costume of white satin was the signal for a general outburst of applause." If musical journalism be destined to have a millinery department, the advertisers will be sure to step in, and we shall read: "Miss Skreemins sang 'Una voce' in an elaborate costume (details given) from the atelier of Madame Rosina"; also, eventually, that "Signor Profundo executed an air from 'Il Seraglio' in a new nine-guinea dress suit made by Schnip."

MISS E. DYKE sends the following admirable lines, suggested by Mr. Edwin Lemare's rendering of Guilman's "Marche Funèbre et Chant Seraphique."

Down below, the bells are tolling,
And the funeral drums are rolling.

See the pompous train advancing!
Plumes are waving, horses prancing.

Painfully the music shrilleth;
Ears and nerves and heart it thrilleth—

Until nigh beyond our bearing Rise the strident tones despairing.

Up above, the angels, meeting
The freed soul, give gentle greeting;

From their harps soft rapture flinging
O'er the spirit they are bringing.

Down below, the noisy sadness;
Up above, the quiet gladness.

Which of these shall last the longer?
Which shall triumph? prove the stronger?

Hush! the loud dirge droopeth, faileth;
Heaven's peace o'er earth's pain prevaileth.

Clamorous woe is stilled for ever;
Joy celestial ceaseth never!

I TAKE off my hat to a musical reporter in the East of England. He writes: "The 'Songs without Words' have a beautiful underlying spirit that is all their own, and this is one of the most consummately beautiful of them all. Commencing in soft, rich tones, it swells later on, never losing its depth and richness, and declines at the close with a wonderful combination of sweetness and rapidity. At the end of the performance there was a unanimous swell of applause from the audience, breaking from a murmur into a roar, powerful, unanimous, and sustained." Later in the same notice I read: "The evening closed with Liszt's gorgeous Rhapsodie, in which deep stormy seas of musical expression calm down into gently percolating rivulets, pass thence to deep flowing rivers, and carry the soul finally into bright liquid bubbling waters." The last sentence is stupendous.

KING KHAMA has been making observations of interest on the English people. "In music," says he, "they use both hands and feet." This shows the danger of hasty generalisation. Somebody must have taken him into an organ loft.

REFERRING to the old "Wassail Song," a correspondent writing from Standish Vicarage, Stonehouse, Gloucestershire, observes: "I have been surprised that the version sung all through this neighbourhood has never yet appeared. The words I enclose are those which are invariably sung here, and every Christmas men still come round with their bowl decorated with apples, evergreens, and ribbons. The tune, too, as I have heard it, differs slightly from what has already appeared in your columns."

THE tune sent shows only such differences as might be expected in the case of a traditional melody. Probably every district has its own version, and I know that one, used some ten miles from Standish, when I was a boy, differed in several respects from that forwarded by my correspondent.

THE song referred to as that still sung around Standish corresponds, as to a majority of its ten verses, with the version I used to hear lower down the Vale of Berkeley. Some stanzas, however, I do not remember, the following among them:

Here's a health unto Colly and to her right leg,
And wishing our master a jolly fat peg (pig).
A jolly fat peg that we may all see,
To my wassailing bowl I drink unto thee.

Here's a health unto Colly and to her right hip,
Pray God send our master a good flock o' ship (sheep).
A good flock o' ship that we may all see,
To my wassailing bowl I drink unto thee.

"Colly," it should be explained, is here used as the name of a cow. By the way, did not this version of the song reach the Vale of Gloucester from the Cotswolds, where ale is the common drink, where corn is grown and sheep are reared? The Valesman drinks cider, grows little corn, and his talk is about bullocks rather than sheep. These local peculiarities are important factors in the determination of such questions.

I REGRET to learn that Mr. Fred. R. Spark has had to put off his aldermanic gown. For twenty years he has been in the Leeds Town Council, and for twelve years discharged the manifold duties of an alderman, all that time doing excellent service. But Mr. Spark happens to be a Liberal; and it chanced, also, that the Tories, after being out in the cold for sixty years, have got into the genial regions of place and power. They may, perhaps, be excused for making the best of the change by turning out the old officials and putting themselves in. Gratitude has no place in politics. But I am sorry for Leeds. Such a public man as the honorary secretary of the Musical Festival is not found every day.

I SEE that Mr. Spark has written to various journals denying that the Leeds Festival Chorus is made up "mostly of factory workers." He gives some interesting particulars, from which it appears that, of the 161 women, 47 are "keepers at home," as married ladies should be, and 67 have "no occupation." Of teachers there are 25, and only the remaining 22 are shop girls or factory workers. Of the 184 men, 21 are factory workers, 49 are tradesmen and shop assistants, 18 are teachers, 56 are clerks and travellers, and 40 are shopmen and warehousemen. Mr. Spark could hardly have taken the description "mostly factory workers" as a reproach. He, I am sure, is free from the unutterable snobbishness of too many English people; but it is well that we know of what social material the famous chorus consists. It is worth noting that, of the 36 actual factory workers, 30 belong to Huddersfield. My congratulations to that good Yorkshire town upon such a distinction.

THAT Boy has got at Star's Journal, although it appears to be, first and chiefly, only a periodical connected with "fashions." In a musical note referring to the first concert of the Queen's Hall Choir, he "lifted" the names Mendelssohn and Beethoven, and put them each in the place of the other; guileless readers being thus informed that Mendelssohn wrote the "Choral Fantasia" and Beethoven the "Walpurgis Night." Good business.

A CORRESPONDENT sends, from the North, a notice of Boieldieu's "La Dame Blanche," as played by Mr. J. W. Turner's Company, under the title: "The White Lady of Avenel." The opinion is favourable to the opera, at which I do not wonder, but some remarks upon the Finale of the second act might have been differently put. "There was to be heard," said the critic, regardless of grammar, "the disappointed growl of baffled vice, the triumph of loyal attachment, and the subdued notes of tender love, all mingling with each other and yet arranged in separate groups of dramatic distinctness."

A CORRESPONDENT calls timely attention to a Sonnet by Coleridge, entitled "Lines to W. Linley, Esq., while he sang a Song to Purcell's Music." I have pleasure in inserting it here:

While my young cheek retains its healthful hues,
And I have many friends who hold me dear,
Linley! methinks I would not often hear
Such melodies as thine, lest I should lose
All memory of the wrongs and sore distress
For which my miserable brethren weep!
But should uncomfortable misfortunes steep
My daily bread in tears and bitterness;
And if at death's dread moment I should lie
With no beloved face at my bed-side,
To fix the last glance of my closing eye,
Methinks such strains, breathed by my angel guide,
Would make me pass the cup of anguish by,
Mix with the blest, nor know that I had died!

S. T. COLERIDGE, 179.

ATTENTION may here be called to the fact that subscriptions are invited for the purpose of placing, in Kensington Parish Church, a memorial of the two Callcotts and Horsley, who were residents in the "Court Suburb." Kensington should chiefly look to it, but some admirers of those musicians may be glad to help. Any sum, not exceeding one guinea, may be sent to Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, 39, Phillimore Gardens.

THE Leeds Festival balance-sheet in brief: Receipts, £10,953 7s. 7d.; expenditure, £8,938 3s. 6d.; net balance, £2,015 4s. 1d. Having placed the odd £15 4s. 1d. to the reserve account (which now stands at £3,881 15s. 9d.), the Committee divided £2,000 among five medical charities.

MR. JOHN TOWERS, who is an Englishman, declares that he can name a dozen Americans competent to succeed Dvorák as head of the Conservatory in New York. Congratulations to the States!

Also from an American paper: "Mr. Thomas Hitchcock has rented his (opera) box for Wednesdays to Mr. J. Stickney, and for Fridays to Mr. J. J. Wyszog." Really!

I HAVE received a printed circular from Mr. C. Purcell Taylor, D.Sc., in which, referring to Henry Purcell, the writer says:

The revival of the popular taste for his exquisite music has, for many years, been a labour of love with me, his only remaining descendant. At first it was uphill work, and the obstacles I met with were considerable; but they only served to make me more determined. I sowed the seed in every part of the world I visited, and now the harvest has come.

I am positively ashamed to say that I never before heard of Dr. Purcell Taylor. Can anyone give me particulars concerning his labours, that my ignorance may be removed and justice done?

SOME American opinions of Paderewski's "Polish" Fantasia have come to hand. One writer describes it as "a wild bizarre production, glowing in colour and astonishing effects, which defy analysis without recourse to the score." Apparently he did not have recourse to the score. I read, further, that the Fantasia is intensely Polish. "The Mazurka, Cracovienne, and Dumka are in evidence." An impression prevails in some quarters that the Dumka is Bohemian, not Polish.

"LONG hair or short hair," exclaims the New York Herald, "Paderewski is the hero of the hour." The same paper remarks that there were "hysterical scenes" during the evening. We know something of them over here.

THE Recorder is an example of hysteria. "He let loose here," says that journal, "a volume of fire and fury and daring impetuosity, and dazzled and bewitched the audience by a play with Liszt's devilish devices, such as—," &c.

IN the Press we have a word-picture of "the great pianist bowing his chrysanthemum head in his stiff way until it seemed as if it must snap off." The artist is not described, soberly; as repeating a piece at the wish of his audience. The Press chooses to remark: "So he breathed again on the dead strings and again they pulsed with thrilling life," which is very pretty. I learn from the same paper that "men can't feel, but women must weep; when they hear Paderewski," which is an ingenious application of Charles Kingsley.

THERE is "much cry" about a new Opera House in the Haymarket. I say nothing, but wait for the "wool."

JOSEPH BENNETT.

THE PURCELL BI-CENTENARY COMMEMORATION.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THE commemorative celebrations in honour of Henry Purcell began, on the 20th ult., with a morning performance by the students of the Royal College of Music of "Dido and Æneas," at the Lyceum Theatre, kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. J. Forbes-Robertson. It was met that the first English opera should find a place in the scheme in honour of our great national composer, and if, perhaps, greater homage would have been paid by the presentation of the work by experienced artists, there was a measure of appropriateness in its being revived by the students of the Royal College of Music, for although antiquaries are at variance concerning the precise year and place of its original production, there is no doubt that it was written for and performed by the "young ladies" of "Mr. Josias Priest's Boarding School at Chelsea," and not later than 1680. Thus its interpretation by the pupils of one of our principal schools of music may be looked upon as a graceful recognition by our young musicians of one who long ago laboured so earnestly and truly for the art, which in turn will demand from them, if they would succeed, their best energies and talents. Whether it has been so regarded by them or no they can scarcely have failed to have benefited by the study necessitated by the preparation of the work. The music is of the kind that exhilarates like the air of a frosty morning in spring. It is manly and invigorating in its joyousness, tender and expressive in its sympathy, and the very antithesis of maudlin sentimentality and frenzied passion. In listening to it—and it should often be heard for it calls for no great executive means—the fact should always be kept in mind that it was written certainly five years before Bach and Handel were born. This was made the more hard to realise at the performance on the 20th ult. owing to the additional orchestral parts, which, with well-intentioned but mistaken zeal, had been written for the occasion by Dr. Charles Wood. They were skilfully introduced, but in one or two places those who were familiar with the music missed certain characteristic effects in the vocal parts, which were hidden by horn notes or other obtrusive instrumental phrases. With this exception, however, the greatest praise is due to all concerned for the care which had manifestly been spent upon the production. The embodiment of Dido by Miss Agnes Nicholls and that of Æneas by Miss Eva Bedford, testified to long and faithful study; and Miss Helen Jackson as Belinda, and the Misses Morfydd Williams and Jeannie Appleby as the two principal Witches reflected credit on themselves and their teachers. Mr. Emyln Davies used his fine voice most effectively in the part of the Sorceress, and Mr. Thomas Thomas justified the continuation of his studies by his rendering of the Sailor's Song, "Come away." Chorus and orchestra did their work well, under the watchful conductorship of Professor Villiers Stanford; Mr. B. Soutten had arranged the dances, which were executed in a manner that made them a memorable feature of the afternoon; and Mr. Richard Temple, the stage director, provided a series of most artistic and delightful pictures.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

The following day a Service, without precedent in musical history, was celebrated in the Nave of Westminster Abbey in commemoration of Henry Purcell's passing from us on November 21, 1695. It is often said that the products of music grow old sooner than those of any other art, but this surely is only true of inferior works. Certainly while listening to the magnificent setting of the "Te Deum" by this master and to a series of anthems instinct with grandeur of conception and palpitating with emotional and intellectual life, the impression made was distinctly the contrary. It was indeed only with difficulty that it was possible to realise that the pulse-stirring strains which flooded the sacred edifice had risen to the same lofty vaulted roof two hundred years before. But the realisation of the early date of this music should be strenuously striven for, because then, and then only, can the colossal genius of this gifted composer be fully understood. At this period, when much is being said, but when probably little is practically known by the majority of music-lovers concerning the works of Purcell, it will be well, perhaps, to point out some of the most salient points of the anthems which were sung at this celebration. The first was "O all ye people, clap your hands," described as a full anthem for Ascension Day, for two sopranos, tenor, and bass. Orchestral parts for this, as also for "O give thanks," had been written by Mr. John E. Borland, who had done his work well, although it must be admitted that it would have been more in keeping with the spirit of the occasion had Purcell's music been left to speak for itself. Both these anthems are characteristic examples of their composer's style. "O give thanks" is the more important of the two, and the Finale is magnificent in its massive dignity. "Praise the Lord, O my soul," is written for six voices, chorus, and orchestra, and in variety of expression, nobility of design, and intense sympathy with its text is unsurpassed in church music. "Remember not, Lord, our offences," is a short but beautiful setting of the words in the Litany which should be familiar to every church choir. "O sing unto the Lord," for four voices and chorus, contains a fine bass solo, and the setting of the words "Let the whole earth stand in awe of Him" is a striking example of truthful and forcible expression. "Thou knowest, Lord," has too long been associated with our funeral services to need comment; but it may be stated that it was written for the funeral of Queen Mary in Westminster Abbey on March 5, 1695, and that it was sung on the following November 26 at the composer's own funeral. The selection was concluded with "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem," in which the magnificent accentuation of the passage beginning "Be Thou exalted" would alone give the composition the highest distinction. Midway in the performance of these works, the Dean of Westminster delivered an appropriate address, in which he happily described Purcell as "emphatically a child of our own race and land." Subsequently, while a specially written voluntary, by Mr. E. Silas, was played on the organ, a procession, which included Sir John Stainer, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir George Grove, Dr. Bridge, Dr. Hubert Parry, Professor Villiers Stanford, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Barclay Squire, proceeded to the grave and laid thereupon the wreaths which had been sent by the Purcell Society, the Royal Academy of Music, and the choir-boys of Westminster Abbey; two other wreaths had already been placed there, one from the Royal College of Organists, and one bearing the inscription "In honour of Henry Purcell—in memory of Vincent Novello." Miss Florence Oliver and Mr. Daniel Price sang the solo parts in the Te Deum most effectively, and great credit is due to the Lay Vicars and large choir, the latter drawn from many sources, who were admirably supported by a capable orchestra of strings, trumpets, and drums, and by Messrs. W. J. Winter, W. Alcock, and H. D. Wetton, who presided at the organ with skill and judgment. The conductors were Sir John Stainer and Dr. Bridge; Sir Arthur Sullivan, who was to have taken part, being detained at Berlin. Too great praise can scarcely be given to Dr. Bridge for the success of this celebration, which will assuredly be a memorable event in the history of the music of our land.

ALBERT HALL.

Dr. Hubert Parry's "Invocation to Music, an Ode written in honour of Henry Purcell," formed the contribution, on the 21st ult., to this celebration by the Royal Choral Society at the Albert Hall. This work, it will be remembered, was written for and produced at the recent Leeds Festival, and was noticed at length in the columns of THE MUSICAL TIMES for last month. It is, therefore, unnecessary to speak of the work in detail; but it should be said that the favourable opinions expressed on that occasion were confirmed on a second hearing by Sir Joseph Barnby's fine choir. The magnificent opening chorus and the intense and masterly expression in the portion entitled "The Dirge," the opening solo of which was finely sung by Mr. Andrew Black, made perhaps the deepest effect on the large audience assembled in the Albert Hall; but the beauty of the tenor solo "Thee fair poetry oft hath sought," which was effectively given by Mr. Ben Davies, and the emotional power of the duet "Love to love calleth," in which the above-named artist was associated with Madame Albani, manifestly made a deep impression. Signs also were not wanting of the favourable reception of many other fine passages, and when the last chords had been heard there could be no mistaking the meaning of the ovation which the composer received as he stepped from the conductor's seat and subsequently remounted the platform.

QUEEN'S HALL.

When shadows lengthen and the gloaming falls,
The star of eve shines forth with brightest rays;
So at the close of that long, splendid day
Which Tallis heralded amid the calls
Of England, stirred within her island walls
To duties manifold, did'st thou arise,
Prophetic Master, whose great page foretells
Their work that follow, and their skill defies.
Sudden, alas! thy noon-tide's radiant glow
Was clouded by the dark of death, and night
Brooded again where late there had been light.
But, now, the East irradiates, and, lo!
The spirit that was thine returns in might;
Our country's Art awakes; her numbers flow.

The above, written by Mr. Joseph Bennett, formed the preface to the programme eruditely annotated by Mr. W. H. Cummings for the special Concert given, on the 21st ult., by the Philharmonic Society. The excerpts selected presented the master in many lights, and well showed not only the characteristics of his style, but also his versatility and power of expressing in sound the various phases of emotion. The fine Toccata in A, which anticipates by fully a quarter of a century the masterfulness of Bach, was brilliantly played on the great organ by Mr. W. S. Hoyte, and was followed by a vigorous rendering by Mr. Watkin Mills of the fine song "Arise, ye subterranean winds," from the music written for Dryden's distorted version of Shakespeare's "Tempest." Mr. Iver McKay also gave an effective rendering of the equally stirring "Come, if you dare," from the opera of "King Arthur," and Madame Amy Sherwin sang so pathetically the famous lament from the last act of "Dido and Æneas" that the audience insisted upon its repetition. Exception, however, must be taken to the performance by the Misses Sybil Palliser and De Lara, on two pianofortes, with orchestra, of the popularly known "Golden" Sonata. This work, published with ten others, of which it is the ninth, by the master's widow in 1697, is essentially a chamber work, and its conversion into an orchestral piece is as inartistic a proceeding as would be the performance, in similar manner, of Beethoven's pianoforte quartets or trios. The second part of the programme consisted of the "Ode to St. Cecilia," a wonderful example of how a musical genius can triumph over a bad libretto, written in this instance by Nicholas Brady. The Ode was first performed on St. Cecilia's Day, November 22, 1692, in the Hall of the Stationers' Company, and was so successful that a second performance was given. It undoubtedly contains some of Purcell's finest writing, and its recital before a nineteenth century audience seemed to make as deep an impression as history tells us it did two hundred years before—a notable tribute this to Purcell's genius. Madame Amy Sherwin sang the trying solo "Thou tun'st this world," and Miss Florence Power rendered the chief alto solo music in a most praiseworthy manner, particularly the exacting and remarkable number entitled "Thy nature's voice." Excellent service was also rendered in the first alto solo parts by Miss Marion Blinkhorn, and the three male soloists, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Arthur Oswald, and Mr. Watkin Mills, discharged their respective duties in a most efficient manner. The choir, which largely consisted of students from the Royal Academy of Music, sang the choral portions with marked intelligence and admirable precision, although a better balance of tone was desirable. Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted, and the orchestra followed his beat with care, the estimable players of the high trumpet parts acquitting themselves of their difficult tasks with zeal, some of which might have been moderated with advantage to the ensemble; for these instruments, acceptable and welcome in a Cathedral, are apt to become obtrusive and disturbing in a concert-room.

BRITISH MUSEUM EXHIBITS.

It was a happy thought of the British Museum authorities to arrange, in the form of an exhibition, the fine collection they possess of works by, and referring to, Henry Purcell, and to invite the fortunate possessors of not less interesting relics to contribute some of their treasures. The nature and variety of the exhibits may be gathered by those who have not visited the exhibition by a perusal of the catalogue which we are to-day enabled to present to our readers. This may be said to form a valuable work of reference which, although only capable of being fully appreciated by the antiquary, can scarcely fail to impress all music-lovers with the important work done by Henry Purcell. The attention of the majority of visitors was doubtless first attracted to the portraits, for in them food is found for the imagination concerning what manner of man he was. There is a pathetic delicacy in the face of the fine painting by J. Closterman, which only too faithfully suggests the death which took place so soon after the artist had finished his work. The full eyes and striking features depicted in the portrait, taken presumably at an earlier date, kindly lent by Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, is also remarkably suggestive to the student of physiognomy. The autograph MSS. show that Purcell was a neat penman; some of the pages indeed contain so few corrections that they would seem to be clean copies by the composer rather than the first jottings of inspirations; but Purcell was so prolific a writer that the thought may have come in almost "perfect form," and required but little after shaping. Very interesting was it also to notice the peculiar shape of the note-heads, which still retain traces of the old diamond form, and the sweep of the tails of the isolated quavers with their affinity to some of the ancient neume signs. But the completeness of the information contained in the catalogue renders further comment unnecessary.

The foregoing history of the Purcell Bi-centenary celebration can scarcely be more appropriately concluded than by the following words of the Archdeacon of London in his sermon on the 17th ult., at St. Paul's Cathedral: "Purcell excelled in every species of composition. He wrote for the Church, the theatre, and the chamber. In all there was the principle of health and strength. His Church music, it has been said by an experienced critic, shows his great mastery of scholastic devices, combined with fine harmony and expressive melody. By the introduction of novel and beautiful forms he enriched it, while preserving its broad strength and solemn style. In his vigorous and wholesome secular music we see his imaginative character, his rare gift of invention, and great power of expression. If he had turned all these magnificent endowments to the service of the devil, what an additional spur he might have added to the decadence of the degrading reigns of the Second Charles and James. But we see in him the devout improver of our Cathedral music; the originator of English melody, as the term is now understood; the father of a form of sane English dramatic composition which was universally followed for more than a century and a half; the introducer of a new and more inspiring employment of the orchestra in accompaniment; the man who excelled all others in his accurate, vigorous, and energetic setting of English words, and the most original and extraordinary musical genius that our country has produced. It is scarcely possible to estimate the loss caused to English art by the early death of Henry Purcell."

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

FASHION frequently changes in music as in other matters, but nothing has as yet affected the popularity of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," with which the Royal Choral Society opened its season at the Albert Hall; the attendance being enormous, and by some estimated at the enormous figure of 13,000 persons, though this is probably an exaggeration. Mr. Santley seemed to be rejuvenescent, singing the part of the Prophet with nearly all his remembered fire and energy. Miss Macintyre, Miss Clara Butt, and Mr. Lloyd Chandos all showed that the line of oratorio singers in this country is being perpetuated. Sir Joseph Barnby's superb choir was, if possible, better than ever. The Baal choruses and "Thanks be to God" have seldom, if ever, been more finely interpreted.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

MR. EDWARD GERMAN'S clever and elaborately scored Orchestral Suite, specially composed for the recent Leeds Festival, was successfully introduced to a metropolitan audience at the Concert of October 26, under the composer's direction, the graceful waltz movement in particular making a very favourable impression. The Symphony was Dvorák's "From the New World," which, like Mr. German's Suite, has already been discussed at length in these columns. Further hearing of Dvorák's work certainly enhances the impression of its beauties and its ineptitudes. The instrumental soloist, Herr Hans Wessely, played Vieuxtemps's fifth Violin Concerto and Wieniawski's Polonaise in D with excellent technique and expression, and Mr. Santley contributed Vulcan's song from "Philemon et Baucis" and an aria from Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro."

An unpretentious and, if the truth be told, unimpressive novelty was included in the programme of the fourth Concert, on the 2nd ult., in the shape of an orchestral piece with the conveniently vague title of "St. Cecilia," by Mr. C. H. Couldery. The solo parts for violin, organ, and harp were well played by Messrs. Celis, Hedgcock, and Lockwood, and the amiable trifle, for it is nothing more, was cordially received by the audience, who called the composer to the platform to bow his acknowledgments. Mdlle. Clotilde Kleeborg's playing of Beethoven's C minor Concerto was notable for its happy mixture of spirit and precision. There is a most engaging vivacity about this young lady's playing: her touch is delightfully elastic, and her whole style alert and brilliant. The Misses Salter sang a duet from Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys" and duets by Gade with more energy and unanimity than charm, Miss Florence Salter also contributing the "Légende," from "Lakmé." The programme was completed by the "Meistersingers" Prelude, the second "Leonora" Overture, and Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, the orchestra especially distinguishing itself in the last-named work.

On the 9th ult., the Prince of Wales's Birthday, the programme was prefaced by the National Anthem and "God bless the Prince of Wales"; the pièce de résistance was the late Mr. Goring Thomas's graceful posthumous cantata "The Swan and the Skylark," originally produced at the Birmingham Festival last year. Full justice was done to the elegant orchestration, added by Professor Stanford, by the band, while the solos were given in excellent style by Miss Jessie Scott (a new-comer), Miss Dews, Mr. Andrew Black, and Mr. Edward Lloyd, the honours of the performance resting with the last-named. A word of praise is also due to the careful and intelligent singing of the choir. Madame Burmeister-Petersen proved herself an accomplished executant in Liszt's E flat Concerto, which, however, needs greater physical force than she has at her command. The remaining orchestral numbers were Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture, the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, and Sullivan's lively "Overture di Ballo." In all of these the fine quality of the band was exhibited to great advantage. Mr. Andrew Black's vigorous rendering of Wotan's "Abschied" met with much applause.

The thanks of all admirers of Tchaikovsky's genius—a steadily increasing class—are due to Mr. Manns for his inclusion in the programme of the Sixth Concert of that master's fine Symphony (No. 5), which had been introduced last summer at one of the Nikisch Concerts. The performance, however, given at the Crystal Palace was decidedly unequal and, in certain passages, positively rough. Still, in spite of these drawbacks, the beauty of the music made its mark. Herr Popper played his own short Concerto in one movement and the familiar Bach aria with his wonted skill; Miss Nina Allerton displayed a good voice but imperfect enunciation in Elsa's Dream and a song by Bohm, and the programme was completed by Berlioz's brilliant orchestral version of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance."

RICHTER CONCERTS.

THE second Concert of Herr Richter's autumn season, given on October 28, at St. James's Hall, opened with a fine performance of Goldmark's Overture to "Sakuntala," which, though fairly well known to London concert-goers, had not previously figured in a Richter programme here. The familiar Prelude and Death Song from "Tristan" which followed having made the usual effect, the first three of Smetana's cycle of six symphonic poems, entitled "Mein Vaterland," were played, as the programme suggested, "probably for the first time in close succession." The three poems, "Vysehrad," "Vltava," and "Sarka" had been heard before, singly, when their picturesque and tuneful character was readily acknowledged; but it must be confessed that the superficiality already felt on those occasions became almost irritating under the trying ordeal of so large a dose. Liszt's first Hungarian Rhapsody and Schumann's B flat Symphony completed the scheme. Dr. Richter was again in magnificent form, and his audience testified with even more than customary warmth to the pleasure received.

The third (and unfortunately the last) Concert was given on the afternoon of the 4th ult. It included Beethoven's delightful Eighth Symphony, played with perfect appreciation of its many humorous and delicate effects; the striking, though it must be confessed rather "theatrical" (not to say bombastic) "King Lear" Overture of Berlioz, the Overture and "new" "Venusberg" music to "Tannhäuser," the Love duet from the first Act of "Die Walküre" (sung with excellent effect by Miss Medora Henson and Mr. Edward Lloyd), and the "Walkürenritt."

All these are familiar features of Dr. Richter's repertory, and no criticism is therefore necessary of the works or the manner of their performance. The audience was exceptionally large, and its enthusiasm was in proportion.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

As our readers already know, the first part of Mr. Henschel's programmes this season is to be devoted to the chief works of Beethoven, which are to be presented in chronological order. The first Concert took place at St. James's Hall, whither Mr. Henschel has returned, for reasons probably connected with the average size of his audiences. The Beethoven selection consisted of the Symphony in C (No. 1), the "Prometheus" Overture, the song "Adelaide," and the Pianoforte Concerto in B flat (solo, Miss Fanny Davies). The "Siegfried Idyll" of Wagner and Brahms's "Academic Festival" Overture made up the programme, which was carried out by all concerned with admirable taste and unflinching skill. The vocalist was that admirable artist, Mr. von Dulong.

At the second Concert, on the 14th ult., we had the "Coriolanus" Overture, the C minor Pianoforte Concerto (soloist, Miss Mathilde Verne), the Symphony in D (No. 2), and the "Song of Penitence" (Op. 48), sung with perfect art by Mr. Henschel in the absence, through indisposition, of Mr. von Dulong. The second part of the programme comprised Dvorák's Slavonic Rhapsody (Op. 45, No. 1) and the Procession of the Gods from Wagner's "Rheingold." Of the third Concert, announced for the 28th ult., we are unable to speak in this issue.

MOTTL CONCERT.

At Queen's Hall, on the 12th ult., Herr Mottl conducted the first of Mr. Schulz-Curtius's winter season of "Wagner Concerts." As "Wagner" is a name to conjure with at the present time, we are not disposed to enquire too curiously into the appropriateness of the title as applied to a programme which contained the Overture to "Oberon," Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, and an Intermezzo from Reznicek's opera "Donna Diana," on the one side, and Wagner's "A Faust" Overture and the "Walkürenritt" and final scene between Brunnhilde and Wotan, from "Die Walküre," on the other. Rather are we inclined to welcome the catholicity shown by the scheme (as contrasted with its designation); for, besides indicating a wider range of vision on the part of Mr. Schulz-Curtius than on that of his subscribers, it greatly enlarged our knowledge of Herr Mottl's powers and limitations. We do not remember a finer performance of the "Oberon" Overture, as a whole, than this one—the opening slow movement was played with a delicacy beyond all praise; and in the Allegro the rhythm was accentuated with such extraordinary vigour that the joyous passages (from Rezia's scena) positively lost their character. This, of course, was a blemish, but the tout ensemble was so wonderfully fine that one easily forgave and almost forgot it.

The rendering of the "Faust" Overture also was full of light and life, and the astounding power of the "Walkürenritt" was brought out with quite exceptional vividness and weight. Schubert's Symphony suffered on this occasion from "too much zeal"—it was "articulated" and polished to such a degree that its atmosphere of mystery, tragedy, and romance evaporated, leaving little but a beautifully prepared "museum specimen" behind. The "Walküre" duet was interpreted with noteworthy skill and sympathy by Miss Marie Brema and Mr. Plunket Greene. The second Concert, on the 26th ult., must be reserved for notice in our January number.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

The thirty-eighth season of Mr. S. Arthur Chappell's instructive and enjoyable entertainments commenced in the usual quiet and unostentatious manner on Monday, the 4th ult. In respect to the memory of Sir Charles Hallé, who, ever since the establishment of these valuable performances in 1859, was a frequent and ever-welcome pianist, Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor, with the Funeral March, was included in the programme and beautifully played by Mr. Leonard Borwick. Schumann's Quartet in A (Op. 41, No. 3) was effectively rendered by Miss Wietrowetz, and Messrs. Ries, Gibson, and Whitehouse. An Adagio from Spohr's Violin Concerto in G minor (No. 6) and Mozart's Sonata for violin and pianoforte in A (No. 17) completed the instrumental portion of the programme, and that refined vocalist, Mr. Dulong, gave much pleasure to the audience in Lieder by Brahms, Schubert, and Schumann.

The first Saturday performance, on the 9th ult., may be dismissed with formal record. The concerted works were Beethoven's early Quartet in F (Op. 18, No. 1) and Dvorák's splendid and thoroughly characteristic Pianoforte Quintet in A (Op. 81). Mr. Leonard Borwick was again the pianist and played Chopin's lovely Sonata in B minor (Op. 58) in the best manner that can be conceived as regards technique and conscientiousness. Mr. Dulong was also again the vocalist, and gave the fullest satisfaction in songs by Schubert, Emmerich, Schumann, and Mendelssohn.

Schumann's rarely-played Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 11) was the central feature in the programme of the 11th ult., and Miss Fanny Davies showed her consummate knowledge of the manner in which Schumann's music should be interpreted by a performance which could not be excelled for tenderness and general poetic feeling. The concerted works were Mozart's Quartet in C, No. 6 of the set dedicated to Haydn, and Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 2), both led by Miss Wietrowetz, who played as her solo, with brilliancy and power, three of Brahms's Hungarian Dances. The vocalist was Mr. Kennerley Rumford, whose well-trained baritone voice told well in songs by Schumann, and an old Irish ditty, "Lay his sword by his side."

On the following Saturday a scheme was arranged which may be dismissed in the briefest possible manner. Mendelssohn's beautiful Quartet in E minor (Op. 44, No. 2) and Brahms's terse and genial Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 101) were admirably rendered, and Miss Agnes Zimmermann, the pianist on this occasion, gave with fluency and sweet expression Chopin's Nocturne in E and the Ballade in A flat. Mr. Stanley was in remarkably good voice, and earned much and well-merited applause in Sullivan's "Thou'rt passing hence" and Gounod's "Médjé."

VARIOUS RECITALS.

Those who predicted that the rage for Pianoforte Recitals would quickly fade and disappear have yet to wait for the fulfilment of their prognostications, for entertainments of this description are being given in numbers unprecedented at this period of the year. We will deal with them as far as possible in chronological order. Mr. Reisenauer, who gave the first of three Recitals in St. James's Hall on October 25, has not altered very much as an executant since he first appeared in London three years ago. He is what may be termed a brilliant and excitable player, indulging in strong contrasts in tone and style, which doubtless account for the fact that he sometimes plays false notes. But he is a very intelligent artist, and his rendering of Schumann's "Carnaval," Weber's "Perpetuum mobile," and Liszt's transcription of Schubert's "Erl-King" was full of interest. The second Recital, on the 5th ult., was a fiasco, for almost immediately after Mr. Reisenauer had finished Bach's Chromatic Fantasia he was taken ill and had to retire from the platform. The performance, however, was given on the following Friday evening and was highly successful. The pianist deserves much praise for his admirable performance of Chopin's Sonata in B minor (Op. 58), the way in which the fugue subject was brought out in Bach's frequently played work above-named, and the wondrous execution he displayed in Liszt's extraordinary Fantasia on "Don Giovanni." In the programme of the last Recital, on the 15th ult., were Schumann's Études Symphoniques, eloquently interpreted, though the last and most important movement was taken much too fast; Beethoven's C sharp minor Sonata (Op. 27, No. 2), and minor pieces by Mozart, Couperin, Rameau, Bach, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Liszt.

Mr. Pradeau, who gave a Recital at the Princes' Hall on Saturday, October 26, is an earnest executant, though his technique is scarcely up to present day requirements. Two large works—Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata and Weber's rarely played Sonata in C (Op. 24), chiefly known by the "Perpetuum mobile" with which it closes, were the leading numbers, and minor pieces by Chopin and Schumann were included in the programme.

Mr. Rosenthal is a performer of phenomenal powers. We use the term advisedly, because he executes the most extraordinary feats at the keyboard with as much apparent ease as if he were merely taking a morning walk. At his first Recital this season, at St. James's Hall, on the 1st ult., he commenced with Weber's beautiful Sonata in A flat (Op. 39), of which he gave an unsurpassable rendering, that of the third movement being truly wonderful. Then he followed on with an even more difficult work, Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques, his reading of which, though differing considerably from that of Madame Schumann, was very striking. The rest of the programme, consisting of minor pieces, scarcely calls for remark. At the second Recital, on the 13th ult., the principal pieces were Beethoven's Sonata in F minor (Op. 57)—the Coda of which was given with thundering force and yet without the slightest suggestion of "pounding the instrument"—and a Sonata in B flat, by Ludwig Schytte, a Danish composer who seems to be coming to the front. It is a thoughtfully written work, and the middle movement, styled Intermezzo, is charming. Mr. Rosenthal ended his Recital—or rather he would have ended it, if the audience had not insisted upon more—with the terribly difficult Hexameron Variations "de bravoure" by Chopin, Liszt, Czerny, Thalberg, and others.

An interesting series of so-called "National Pianoforte Recitals" was commenced by Miss Dora Bright, with the valuable assistance of Mr. David Bispham, in the Small Queen's Hall, on Wednesday, October 30. The programme was described as "Early Germany," but the title was a little misleading, as the composers represented included Handel, Sebastian Bach, Philip Emanuel Bach, Beethoven, and Weber. All were most expressively rendered, however, by both artists, so there is no occasion to grumble. The second Recital, on the 11th ult., was devoted to "Modern Germany," and commenced with Schubert's "Fantasia Sonata" in G (Op. 78), which is an erroneous description, as it is a genuine Sonata in regular form. It may be further pointed out that Wagner did not die at Bayreuth, but at Venice. The programme included Schumann's "Kinderscenen" and various smaller pieces by Mendelssohn, Raff, Brahms, Moszkowski, Jensen, and others. At the third Recital, on the 19th ult., France was represented, including examples of Lulli, Rameau, Godard, Saint-Saëns, Bizet, Massenet, &c. All were thoroughly well rendered by the two artists, but there were further errors in the facts and dates given, and this is a matter that should receive the most careful attention in a series of performances of this nature.

Mr. Rosario Scalero gave a Violin Recital in the Queen's Hall on October 24, and a second on the 2nd ult. At this distance of time it is only necessary to say that the new-comer is an executant of more than average ability, his tone in the upper register being very brilliant. A third Recital was given on the 9th ult. The programmes were well chosen, including pieces by Beethoven, Bach, Mozart, Tartini, Dvorák, Max Bruch, Sgambati, Goldmark, and the performer himself.

A Pianoforte Recital was given by Mr. V. Galiero in St. James's Hall, on the 7th ult., the player reviving a Sonata in F sharp minor by Hummel (Op. 81), Scarlatti's celebrated "Cat's Fugue," besides giving various pieces by Chopin, Bach, Liszt, and examples by little known composers such as Galuppi (1703-1785) and Turini (1743-1812). Mr. Galiero is evidently a very able executant, but the exact place he should occupy in the present extensive list of accomplished pianists cannot at present be determined.

Miss Maude Rihl, who gave a Pianoforte Recital on the 12th ult., is an ex-Thalberg scholar at the Royal Academy of Music and studied under Mr. Tobias Matthay, and subsequently under M. Leschetizky, at Vienna. She has unquestionably excellent technique and artistic intelligence, evidence of this being afforded by her interpretation of Schumann's Papillons (Op. 2), pieces by Chopin, and some novelties by her preceptors. These were three cleverly written sketches in a thoroughly modern spirit by Mr. Matthay, and a light and brilliant trifle, "La Piccola," by Leschetizky.

Many musicians and amateurs will probably be of opinion that one of the most interesting Recitals of the past month was that of Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Leonard Borwick, at St. James's Hall, on the 8th ult. The first-named artist played Bach's French Suite in E (No. 6) and a number of minor pieces by Schumann, Brahms, Chopin, and Liszt. It was stated in print that Mr. Borwick broke down in Schumann's Toccata in C (Op. 7), but this is entirely incorrect. He was simply interrupted by the bell of a muffin-man somewhere in the neighbourhood, and very properly stopped until the nuisance had abated. Mr. Greene's vocal selections included the whole of Schumann's beautiful cycle "A Poet's Love," in which the genius of the master is so fully manifested, and various other pieces by Battison Haynes, Valérie White, Arthur Somervell, Villiers Stanford, and Hubert Parry. All these were as finely rendered as anyone could desire, and the joint Recital may be regarded in every way as an unqualified success.

The last of the three Recitals of music written or arranged for two pianofortes, given by the Misses Sutro, took place at St. James's Hall on the 20th ult. Perhaps the most interesting number in the programme was Mozart's Duet Sonata in D minor, a work scarcely known to the present generation. A series of Variations by Mr. E. Rudorff (Op. 1), in the modern German manner, proved effective, and the whole programme was enjoyable. It is much to be hoped that these admirable Recitals will be followed by another series at the earliest opportunity.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

AN Orchestral Concert was given by the pupils on the 8th ult., in the Concert Hall attached to the College. We fancy we have heard the orchestra in better form during previous terms, yet there was much to admire in the performances of Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 2) and Schumann's great C major Symphony, in which latter the splendid Scherzo was given with immense spirit, and the soulful, inspired Adagio with much beauty of expression. Miss Beatrice Cerasoli, a young scholar, was the soloist in Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte Concerto. Her playing was distinguished by refinement, fluent execution, and a decided and very welcome feeling for rhythm. Miss Marie Motto essayed Max Bruch's "Scottish" Fantasia for violin, but though her performance displayed gifts of no mean order she was distinctly overweighted by her very difficult task. Mr. R. Emlyn Davies sang Purcell's fine song "Ye twice ten hundred deities" with sonorous voice and good declamatory style, and Miss Alice M. Hayden was heard to some advantage in an air from the "Huguenots." Professor Stanford conducted.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

ADDITIONAL interest was imparted to the Concert given by the students of the Royal Academy of Music, on the 11th ult., in St. James's Hall, by the inclusion in the programme of Borodine's second String Quartet in D, which was announced as "first time of performance in England," and probably was known to but very few amongst the large audience. The work, which comprises the usual four movements, is a characteristic example of the new Russian School of Music, and contains an Andante, entitled "Notturmo," of great beauty. Great credit is due to Miss E. Reynolds, Miss B. Stuart, Mr. Vernon, and Miss M. Mukle for their praiseworthy endeavours to overcome the many difficulties of the part-writing, to which experienced artists alone could do full justice. The most noteworthy performances of the rest of the Concert was the very promising violoncello playing by Mr. Dezső Kordy, and a MS. Ballade for violin and pianoforte by Mr. J. C. Holbrook, who, assisted by Mr. A. Antonietti, secured an effective rendering of his unpretentious composition. Other students worthy of mention who appeared, were Mr. P. H. Miles (violinist), and the Misses Edith Pratt, Llewela Davies, and E. Horne (pianists). The most successful of the vocalists were Miss G. Bevan and Miss L. Atkinson.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

THE first meeting of the twenty-second session of the Musical Association was held at the Royal College of Organists, on the 12th ult., when a paper of great antiquarian value was read by Sir John Stainer. This paper dealt with a portion of a collection of upwards of 2,000 MSS., formed in the latter part of the last century by a Venetian Jesuit named Canonici, and which was purchased by the authorities of the Bodleian Library, Oxford, in 1818. The liturgical MSS. had, Sir John said, been catalogued; but the MS. to which he was about to draw attention had been neglected, until found by his son Charles Stainer. This MS. contained a large proportion of French and Italian secular songs, for the most part composed by Dufay and Binchois. Of Dufay alone there were thirty-eight French songs in three and four parts, besides Italian songs and sacred music. As Dufay was admittedly the greatest master of his age, and as his secular compositions were but little known, the lecturer had chosen the latter for his chief consideration. He, however, deemed it necessary to first refer to the composers other than Dufay and Binchois, whose compositions were also represented in this MS. Some fifteen or sixteen of these composers' names were found in the short paper published by Coussemaker in 1869, under the title of "Les Harmonistes du Quatorzième Siècle." This paper formed part of the preface to a book on the harmonists of the fourteenth century which Coussemaker had in hand, but the publication of which was unfortunately prevented by the author's death in 1876. A name of particular interest was that of Brasart, who was known to be a composer of great repute during this period. Gafori, in his treatise "De Musica Utriusque Cantus practica" (1496), cited Brasart, together with Dunstable, Binchois, and Dufay, as an authority for the use of a particular discord. The lecturer thought that the reason why so few of Brasart's compositions were to be found was because he often wrote under the name of "Ciconia de Leodio," or "The Stork of Liège." Three other names, those of Johannes Tapissier, Johannes Carmen, and Johannes Césanis, were of interest, because they were cited by a contemporary French poet, Martin le Franc (who wrote between 1436 and 1439), as the most popular composers in Paris of the period immediately preceding that of Dufay and Binchois. The passage occurred in his poem, entitled "Le Champion des Dames," and, freely translated, ran as follows: "Not long ago, Tapissier, Carmen, and Césanis made such sweet music that all Paris and all those who flocked to hear them were filled with amazement; but none of their compositions (so I am told by those who heard them) were ever so exquisitely melodious as those of Dufay and Binchois. For these latter have introduced new harmonies in their part-writing, and have made improvements in the use of accidentals, of rests, and of mutations, and they have adopted the English style and taken Dunstable as their pattern. Consequently their music is marvellously bright and attractive, and will last for all time." The Bodleian MS. consisted of 282 pages of vocal music with a contemporary index beginning at the letter E. It was written on a five-line stave throughout, and was ascribed to the latter part of the fifteenth century—a date which was supported by the character of the musical notation, and also by the names of the composers. The earliest date found at the head of the compositions was 1422, and the latest 1436. Dufay's song for three alto voices, "Je me plains piteusement," was dated 1425, and his "Adieu ces bons vins," 1426. Seven pages, containing compositions by Antonius Romanus, Ubertus de Psalins, Nicholaus Cachazie, and Magister Johannes Ciconia de Leodio, were written in the old black notation (which, before 1400, was practically universal); but, with this exception, the whole of the MS. was written in the white or open note notation, black notes being used only to reduce the value of a note by one-third—i.e., to enable the composer to write "three against two." In the old black notation this had been effected by using either open notes, or notes coloured red. Examples of the white note notation occurred occasionally before Dufay's time, but to him was due the credit of bringing it into general use. The C clef was found on the first four lines of the stave and the F clef on the third and fourth lines of the stave. The accidentals used were our present flat and natural signs, but the latter also did duty for our sharp sign, and when placed before a note which would otherwise be sung sharp according to the rules of Musica ficta, indicated that it was not to be sharpened, or, in other words, that the laws of Musica ficta were not to be applied. These signs, which Dufay used in order to forbid and prevent the use of Musica ficta, were a most valuable evidence, or rather were an absolute proof that he fully expected these laws to be applied in general. Some caution, however, was required in transcribing, as these laws were temporarily suspended in modulating passages. Much valuable information on the subject of "Musica ficta" would be found in a paper on "The Sharp, Flat, and Natural," read by Professor Niecks before this Society. From the fact that it was rather the exception than the rule that the words began with the music, and also that a long series of notes without any words often occurred in the middle and end of a song, the lecturer thought it might safely be inferred that instruments of the viol family had been employed throughout. This view was supported by M. Gevaert in his recent work, "Les origines du chant Liturgique de l'église Latine." Doubtless we had here the source of similar introductions and closes in the songs of Handel and Bach, and of a form of construction still rigidly observed in modern drawing-room ballads. The lecturer then explained in a lucid and masterly manner the peculiarities of the old notation and the rules to be observed in deciphering it. Attention was drawn to the variety of cadences used by Dufay, to the presence of suspensions, and the employment without preparation of chords of the 6-4, seventh on the supertonic, and the chord of the minor thirteenth. With regard to the voices written for, the music seemed to indicate only knowledge of a low treble or mezzo-soprano, which rarely extended over an octave in compass; and tenors which, although covering a compass of an octave and a half, were nearly always interchangeable. In short, Dufay had only two voices, one for the cantors and another for the contratenor and tenor parts. This suggested that previous to his time music was commonly written for two equal voices. There was a decided seeking after form in Dufay's music. The song "Je ne puis plus" consisted entirely of five consecutive six-bar phrases, and to give effect to this design each phrase ended with a sort of cadence; the first was on the note E, the second on D, the third on G, and the last two on D. Traces of thematic development were also discernible. This mostly took the form of carrying the melody up to the same height as before, and down to the same lower note, but at the same time varying the position of the accents and the order of the notes as grouped. There were also a few instances in which he clearly tried to return to his original motive at the close of the piece, after having made a digression in the central position. As this, however, was an ancient form of national melodies an attempt to follow it in polyphonic music was not surprising.

During the subsequent discussion Mr. W. H. Cummings, who occupied the chair, said, in reference to Brasart, that evidence showed it was no uncommon practice of the old composers to write under an assumed name. Dr. Hubert Parry said the discovery of the MS. would prove of incalculable value in the history of music; it was just of that kind which had the supreme merit of bringing one's mind in touch with the music of the past. We knew that Dufay was the father of the Netherlands school, but we needed more of his music with reference to Dunstable, and this was precisely what the MS. provided. Professor Bridge thought that, in passing a vote of thanks to Sir John Stainer, the labours of his son, by which they had so greatly profited, should not be forgotten. It should be added that the members of the Association were presented with copies of several of the old songs, which were also admirably played by a string quartet of Royal College students.

THE MUSICAL GUILD.

THERE has been a marked improvement in the attendance at the first two Concerts of this Association's thirteenth series. We were gratified to observe so welcome a change, for few societies deserve better of lovers of high-class chamber music. At the opening Concert of the season, on October 29, at the Kensington Town Hall, carefully finished and wholly praiseworthy performances were given of Beethoven's E flat String Quartet (Op. 74) and Dvorák's similar work in the same key (Op. 51), Messrs. Arthur Bent, Wallace Sutcliffe, Alfred Hobday, and Paul Ludwig being the interpreters. Miss Winifred Holiday and Miss Isabella Donkersley played Bach's great D minor Double Concerto for two violins excellently; the wonderful slow movement was "sung" with all requisite expression, and the exhilarating Finale with plenty of spirit and abandon. Mrs. Helen Trust sang two of her favourite unemotional songs in her well-known manner. At the second Concert, on the 12th ult., the programme included a quasi-novelty in the shape of Dr. C. H. H. Parry's String Quintet in E flat, a fine, virile work in which the interest is well sustained throughout a broad and dignified Allegro (a genuine "Parry"), a bright, melodious, and attractive Scherzo (Allegro molto), an impressive Lento, and a most energetic Finale (Molto vivace). The Quintet is very difficult, and the performers did not altogether succeed in making it appear the reverse. Miss Ethel Sharpe played Chopin's B flat minor Pianoforte Sonata and once more proved herself one of the best of our younger pianists. Miss Donkersley successfully introduced a novelty, a fine Ballade in D minor for violin and pianoforte, by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, who accompanied her. The work is a somewhat ambitious effort, showing a few signs of inexperience, but also so much beauty, power of expression, and originality as to deserve a hearing in its original form, with orchestral accompaniment. Miss Donkersley played the Ballade con amore, though the young composer, with an excess of modesty, unduly subdued the important accompaniment. Mrs. Kate Lee sang songs by Brahms and Parry, and the interesting Concert closed with a delightful performance of Schumann's A major String Quartet, by Miss Donkersley, Messrs. Sutcliffe, Hobday, and Werge.

BORDER TOWNS GOUNOD FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

FOLLOWING the example of other centres of musical activity, the Border towns of Scotland have recently inaugurated and brought to a successful issue a Musical Festival of two days' duration. For some months past the choral societies of Hawick (Conductor, Mr. W. Fiddes Wilson), Galashiels (Mr. J. A. Bairstow), Melrose (Mr. J. Hall), Selkirk (Mr. W. H. Walker), and Jedburgh (Mr. R. D. Balfour) have been busily engaged in rehearsing certain works for the event in question; and on Thursday and Friday, the 14th and 15th ult., the combined forces, numbering together nearly 300 voices, were brought together at Hawick, under the direction of Mr. W. Fiddes Wilson, and gave a practical demonstration of the result of their labours. It was not to be expected that an initial undertaking of this kind, surrounded by inevitable difficulties, would attain the importance of the established provincial festivals of this country. Absolute success in such undertakings is usually achieved only at the cost of much labour and many disappointments, which go to make up that most valuable and essential qualification which we call experience. The result of this first experiment on the part of the music-loving people of the Border towns is so far encouraging, however, that with further experience to guide them they may reasonably be expected to accomplish even greater things in the future.

In connection with the Festival which has just taken place, it is doubtful whether it was a wise thing to select for performance the works of one composer only. Under any circumstances it was scarcely prudent to include in one programme two such works as Gounod's "Redemption" and "Mors et Vita," thus necessitating, in order to bring the programme within reasonable limits, cuts so many and important as to make it impossible to realise to their full extent the intentions of the composer. Either work, in its entirety, would have served for one Concert, and, for considerations connected with the advancement of art, would have been more satisfactory than the performance of fragments of both works. It is from a sense of duty that this matter is alluded to, and it is with more pleasurable feelings that we now turn to the manner in which the music was performed. Selections from the two important works already alluded to constituted the programme of the first evening; and for the second Concert selections from various works of Gounod were given. For the more important works some fifty members of the Scottish Orchestra were engaged, together with the Edinburgh String Quintet. The singing of the choir gave evidence of much careful training, and, considering all things, was worthy of much praise. There is, of course, room for much improvement, as must almost necessarily be the case with practically the first serious attempt of a newly-formed choir brought together from towns lying some distance apart; but as an earnest of what is possible by perseverance and determined effort the results were eminently satisfactory. The orchestra, too, did excellent service, and merited a full share of the success of the Festival. The soloists on the first evening were Miss Thudichum (whose efforts were particularly appreciated), Miss Bessie Grant, Mr. James Gawthrop, and Mr. Whitney Tew; and at the second Concert, Madame Alice Gomez and Mr. Dudley Buck were added to these. Herr Otto Eggerer, of Edinburgh, was an efficient accompanist.

Large audiences attended both Concerts, including amongst them the Marquis of Lothian, the Earl and Countess of Minto, Lord and Lady Stratheden and Campbell, Lord George Scott, and Lady Margaret Kerr. At the close of the Festival the Countess of Minto presented the Conductor, Mr. W. Fiddes Wilson, with a gold watch, in the name of the choir.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLISH MUSIC.

ON October 30, at the Baker Street Church of England High School for Girls, Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland commenced a course of six Lectures on the "History of English Music." In the opening discourse, entitled "Dunstable and the Theorists," a comprehensive and admirably lucid summary of the early stages of polyphonic music (from the eleventh century onwards) was given, and the various forms evolved—"Diaphony," "Faux bourdon," "Discant," &c., were described. The theorists dealt with were John Cotton, John of Salisbury, Walter Odington, John de Muris, Simon Tunstede, Power, Chilton, Walsingham, De Handlo, and Hothby. Finally, the position and importance of Dunstable were clearly defined, the oft-repeated assertion that he "invented" counterpoint being thus referred to by the lecturer: "The silly assertion that an art like counterpoint could be in any sense invented by one person would need no refutation were it not that it has recently been revived in a 'History of English Music,' the author of which is so pleased with what he considers to be a great discovery that he reiterates it nearly two dozen times in the early part of his book. . . . What Tinctor does say is that 'this new art had its fount and origin among the English, of whom Dunstable was the principal.'" The musical illustrations consisted of "Sumer is iumen in," a three-part motet of Dunstable's, and the "Agincourt Song."

The second Lecture, on the 6th ult., dealt with "Gibbons and the Madrigalian Era," from 1500 to 1625. The influence on music of Henry VIII., the work of Fayrfax, Turges, Newark, Taverner, Tallis, and Byrd, and the results of the importation of Italian music were discussed, and the form and style of the madrigal and motet at this period described. The music of Morley, and his famous work "A Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practical Music," and the work of Mundy, Weelkes, Kirbye, Wilbye, Farnaby, and other musicians of that time were also considered, the last musician dealt with being Orlando Gibbons, "in whom the music of this era found its completest perfection." Several beautiful examples of the madrigalian school were sung, and virginal pieces played.

"Lawes and the Monodists" formed the subject of the third Lecture, on the 13th ult., which was naturally concerned with the change which came over music at the end of the sixteenth and beginning of the seventeenth century. The effect of the invention of opera and the innovations of Peri and Monteverde were fully described, and their transference to England through Cooper ("Coperario") and his pupil, Henry Lawes, clearly shown. The lecturer next described the Masque and the society in which it flourished, Lawes's manner of setting words being analysed with great care and skill. The instrumental music of the time was also touched upon, that of John Jenkins and C. Symphon being specially mentioned. Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss L. E. Broadwood, and Mr. and Miss Dolmetsch contributed the musical illustrations.

On the 20th ult. the lecturer appropriately dealt with "Purcell and the Dramatists." He drew attention to the destruction of Church music by the Puritans, its encouragement by Charles II., quoted Pepys in confirmation of some of his statements, and showed the influence on English music of Lully and the French dramatic school. Purcell's life, and the characteristic qualities of his genius and style were naturally dwelt upon at length and with obvious sympathy, and Blow, Pelham Humfrey, and Michael Wise were not forgotten. Several of Purcell's vocal pieces were sung with rare charm of style and dramatic expression by Mrs. Hutchinson, accompanied by Mr. Maitland on his magnificent harpsichord, and a Suite of the English master's composing was also played by the lecturer.

"ANTIGONE."

PERFORMANCES of "Antigone" under conditions approximating to those of the Greek stage are so rare that much interest was excited when the prospectus issued for the present season by Mr. Geaussen, of the Hampstead Conservatoire, was found to contain the promise of a representation. The obligation was duly met on the 4th ult., when a crowded audience witnessed the revival, and paid it the highest possible compliment of close attention and marked sympathy. We have seen urged against the enterprise so successfully carried through by Mr. Geaussen and Mr. Charles Fry, stage director, that the Greek model was not faithfully observed—that, for instance, the characters were not represented by three men, wearing masks and supplied with mouth resonators, as well as, we suppose, some kind of stilts. Also that the chorus did not speak together in a form of rhythmical chant, but sang Mendelssohn's modern music to the accompaniment of a modern orchestra. We are unable to regard these objections as well considered, because, if there be one thing plainer than another in connection with revivals of Greek drama, it is that there must be some kind of compromise between ancient procedure and present day conditions. It would, no doubt, be possible to build an open-air theatre on the Greek plan; and give within it representations which should be a fairly close copy of the antique original. Possibly, also, an audience of classical enthusiasts would take deep interest in the performances; but where would be the Greek spirit, trained to such procedure, and taught to look upon dramatic representations as religious observances? In our modern reproductions, the altar with its sacred fire duly appears, but is looked upon more as a decorative "property" than a solemn symbol of homage to the gods. We do not hesitate to say that a Greek play correctly rendered would excite amusement rather than reverence. There remains the other consideration, that it is entirely legitimate to consider the drama before its trappings, and show it in operation under conditions best adapted to enlist the sympathy of a modern audience on behalf of noble thoughts and the profound lessons they so impressively convey. This object, as we all know, is quite compatible with such an approximation to the Greek stage as shall suffice for the proper working of the play. In this manner was "Antigone" presented at the Hampstead Conservatoire. With regard to the music, a free hand might be claimed and allowed under conditions. We do not know what the Greek music was, and attempts to reproduce it are like guesses at identity made in the dark. The essential point is to have music in which one may recognise Greek feeling as it has come down to us through the plays. To some extent Mendelssohn has given us such strains, and listening to the best of his work, while we know that it is as far from Greek as the North Pole from the South, we are conscious of no anachronism deeper than that of form. The true spirit is there. We hope, therefore, that Mr. Geaussen and Mr. Fry will persevere and give us a series of the ancient dramas in the manner which helped to make "Antigone" so marked a success.

It will readily be understood that Mr. Charles Fry's share in the production of "Antigone" was one of exceptional responsibility; that of Mr. Geaussen as musical director being light in comparison. Intelligent as are the leading members of the Irving Club, they were new to this particular work and its conditions, while the members of the chorus had to be wrought into proper form out of absolutely raw material. Let us generously estimate the difficulties in Mr. Fry's way, and with no less liberality applaud the result of his toil. That he was seconded with entire willingness and zeal is true, but the circumstance hardly detracts from the approving recognition so fairly earned. While praising the teacher let us not forget the taught—let us not forget Miss Olive Kennett, who, as Antigone, established her claim to recognition as—though she be not on the professional stage—one of the best actresses in serious and elevated parts that we possess. She looked the character admirably, and seemed, as by instinct, to perceive and reproduce its heroic qualities. Whether in defiance of the tyrant, or lamenting her fate, she succeeded in reaching the heart of her audience. Nothing more was expected; nothing more was needed. Neither let us forget the supremely engaging and tender Ismene of Miss Braithwaite—a true foil in her simple maidenliness to the combination of maidenliness and heroism which made up the principal figure; nor should we pass over the well-judged Creon of Mr. Ernest Meads, which was no less admirable when humbled and broken by Fate than when in the pride of power. Capital service was done, too, by Mr. Arthur Fayne, whose embodiment of the blind prophet, and delivery of his important lines, gave promise of a future for the young artist. If we do not mention all the performers, it is not because they were undeserving. Each of them contributed to an ensemble of which all had reason to be proud. As musical chief, Mr. Geaussen controlled a professional orchestra chosen from the Philharmonic band, and a chorus which, under novel and trying conditions, deserved hearty praise, if not the crown that rewards perfection. We may add here that, among the audience, was a granddaughter of Mendelssohn, who expressed her high gratification. The performance was subsequently repeated. We now await another revival.

REVIEWS.

Richard Wagner's Prose Works. Vol. 3: The Theatre. Translated by William Ashton Ellis, Editor of The Meister, &c. [Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Co.]

MR. ELLIS remarks, in his preface, that the volume "represents a very important epoch in Richard Wagner's life." But, as a matter of fact, every epoch in the master's life seems "very important." We have an article "On Musical Criticism" which originally appeared in the form of a letter to the editor of the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik. Wagner wished to take arms against what he called, somewhat pleonastically, "uncritical, bad criticism," but with him the goodness or badness of the criticism depended to some extent upon its agreement or the reverse with his art-theories; although it must be confessed that, especially in the early days, there were critics who either could not or would not discuss him from his own standpoint. This article is followed by "Judaism in Music," a piece of writing which caused some stir at the time of its appearance and, naturally, considerable ill-feeling. There are some hard sayings in it, and prejudice is written in large letters all over it. The attack on Meyerbeer is bitter; one might, indeed, say unfair. On the other hand, the references to Mendelssohn are couched in very careful language. As a man Wagner speaks of him as "of the finest and most varied culture, and of the highest, tenderest sense of honour." The "Mémentos of Spontini" form very attractive reading. There is a Berlioz-Mémoires touch in the story of the "magnificent" Triumphant March in "La Vestale." Wagner asked the composer why he had introduced no trombones into it? "Est-ce que je n'y ai pas des trombones?" asked the composer; and on referring to his score, and finding there were none, he is said to have requested Wagner to write out parts for those instruments in time for the next rehearsal. This story may, we think, be taken cum grano salis. The "Music of the Future" ("Zukunftsmusik") is one of the most valuable of Wagner's writings. The author expounds his views in, for him, singularly clear language. In the preface, Mr. Ellis refers to the "able translation" of that article by Mr. E. Dannreuther. The letter on the performances of "Tannhäuser" in Paris, in 1861, is also another interesting feature of the volume. It was published in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung within a month of the fiasco. The failure was owing to party opposition; when Wagner withdrew his score the house had been "already sold out for several performances in advance." The hostile reception then given to the work has been fully atoned for by its recent careful, and, we may add, successful production in the French capital. Mr. Ellis, following the plan of his earlier volumes, has given a convenient summary of contents; and, besides, a very full Index, for which all readers will be grateful. With the translation one may not always be quite satisfied. But it must be remembered that the translator's task was one of extreme difficulty; there are even passages in Wagner's writings in which the exact meaning is by no means clear. And, again, Mr. Ellis has always been anxious to reproduce, so far as was possible, Wagner's peculiar and, at times, crabbed style; not in any way to soften or conceal it. The mere fact that he has ventured on such an undertaking as the translation of all Wagner's writings argues courage of no ordinary kind.

Robert Schumann's Works for the Pianoforte (complete). Edited and fingered by Agnes Zimmermann. Vol. 3. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE publication of this volume completes Miss Zimmermann's edition of the pianoforte works of Schumann, so that we have now an English edition of the composer's productions for his favourite instrument worthy of his position in the esteem of music-lovers. Miss Zimmermann's name is itself sufficient to recommend the edition as regards accuracy in the important matter of phrasing marks, &c., and the suggestion of appropriate fingering; but the fact that in her delicate task she has also had the advantage of advice from the greatest living authority on the subject of Schumann's intentions naturally increases one's confidence. In another respect also—less vital, indeed, than that just referred to, but still of considerable importance in an age when few can claim to be completely independent of the optician's aid—this edition will commend itself to the musical public. The print is large and clear to an even greater degree than usual with the publications issued by the same firm. The space allotted deprives even the most "crowded" passages of that "entangled" appearance that affrights so many whose spirit is willing but whose flesh is weak. The volume contains, if not the greatest, yet surely the most attractive of Schumann's works for the pianoforte. Its complete contents are set forth in another part of this journal, but we may select from them, in proof of our contention, the "Faschingsschwank aus Wien" ("Carnival freak from Vienna"), the "Three Romances," Op. 28, the Studies and Sketches for pedal pianoforte, the famous "Album for the Young," the delicious "Forest Scenes," the Albumblätter, the marvellously fine "Pieces in Fughetta Form," in which the influence of Bach is so strikingly shown, and the noble "Songs of the Dawn." These works include several of the most picturesque and individual of the master's utterances, and embrace, of course, the productions of his ripest period.

The Irish Song Book, with Original Irish Airs. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by Alfred Perceval Graves. [T. Fisher Unwin.]

THE interest in national music of all kinds is ever on the increase, and this volume forms a welcome addition to works concerning the "immortal melodies of the Emerald Isle." The writer, in the Introduction, praises Professor Stanford for having sought inspiration "from those well-nigh inexhaustible sources"—i.e., the great collections of ancient Irish music. Dr. Parry, whom he quotes, has described that music as "probably the most human, most varied, most poetical in the world." Whence are to be obtained the purest settings of old Irish airs?—a question of importance—is discussed briefly. From the harpers and other instrumentalists, says one school of critics; from the ballad-singers, says another. In favour of the latter it has been remarked that the rhythm and metre of the words must have imposed restraints upon the singers, whereas instrumentalists could alter or invent at their own sweet will. Singers, however, are not immaculate, and, like Mr. Silas Wegg, may occasionally have dropped into a little poetry on their own account. Still the balance is in their favour. Dr. Petrie, in the preface to his great collection, declares that he found versions differing so greatly, that they could with difficulty be recognised as being the one air. Mr. Graves has married some of our best lyrics, ancient and modern, either "unmatched or ill-matched to music," to some of the finest old Irish airs. Dealing with the later lyrics, he tells us, is "extremely delicate work." And he expects "to be roundly attacked" for having, in some cases, omitted or transposed a stanza. But ballads, unreasonable in length, must be compressed, unless they be taken as texts for cantatas. This interesting "Irish Song Book" has already appeared in two editions. The compiler has contributed some graceful lyrics of his own. Besides an ordinary table of contents, there is a convenient list of authors and anonymous songs, with dates.

The Captive Lover. Song by Henry Purcell. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IN view of the absorbing interest now shown in the writings of Purcell the publication of this song is very opportune. The value of this edition is much increased by its having been edited from the Autograph by Professor Bridge, to whose recent patriotic researches we are so greatly indebted for several important discoveries concerning the life and works of our great composer. Apart, however, from the historical interest of the song, it possesses a naive charm of its own that will appeal to all sympathetic singers, into whose portfolios the expressive little ditty should speedily make its way.

Rondo in B minor. For Violin and Pianoforte. By L. Spohr. Op. 145, No. 6. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is the last of a series of pieces for violin and pianoforte which might with advantage be played in our Concert rooms, instead of excerpts from this master's concerted works, when no orchestra is available. The Rondo now under notice is in Spohr's most characteristic style and possesses a second subject of great sensuous charm. The clearness of the printing will be much appreciated by those who have to read at sight the chromatic pianoforte part.

Twelve Pieces for Pianoforte. By P. Tschaiikowsky. Two Books. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE Russian composer whose career came so suddenly to an end in 1893 wrote, like Rubinstein, many songs and short pianoforte pieces which have already attained world-wide celebrity. His "Pathetic" Symphony in B minor was produced at a Philharmonic Concert, under the direction of Sir A. C. Mackenzie; and this important work has shown him worthy of a high place among the symphonic writers of the present century. It has, indeed, materially increased his reputation in this country, so that anything from his pen is now welcome. The pieces in this collection are exceedingly attractive. In Book I we have a clever and showy Etude; a Chanson triste, full of naïveté and melancholy charm; a Marche Funèbre, simple and solemn; two pleasing Mazurkas, and a Chant sans Paroles, tender and expressive. Book 2 contains the characteristic "Au Village," two graceful Valses, a quaint Danse Russe, a lively Scherzo, and a Réverie Interrompue, the last, but by no means the least interesting of the set. All these pieces are admirably written for the instrument, and, though they require great care in phrasing, present no formidable difficulties.

FOREIGN NOTES.

ALTENBURG.—August Klughardt's new opera, "Gudrun," met with a first performance last month at the Hof-Theater, and was very well received, both by a numerous audience and the critics.

AMSTERDAM.—M. Willem Kes conducted the Philharmonic Concerts at the Concertgebouw for the last time, on October 31, previous to his departure for his new sphere of activity in Glasgow. The eminent musician was the recipient of quite a series of ovations on the part of an audience which filled every part of the hall, and thus testified to the high esteem in which he has so long been held, and to the feelings of regret in losing his services. At the same Concert M. Kes's successor, Herr Mengelberg, made his début here in the capacity of pianist with a much admired performance of Liszt's Concerto in E flat.

BARCELONA.—A new operetta, "Cabo Primero," by the talented composer Señor Fernandez Caballero, recently brought out at the Eldorado, is enjoying an immense success here. The libretto, brimming over with fun, is by Señor Lucio, and the music is distinctly clever.

BERLIN.—The Krollische Theater, though no longer the temporary home of the Royal Opera, will still continue to be used by that Institution for weekly afternoon performances of light opera at popular prices. Humperdinck's "Hänsel und Gretel" is to be the first of these.—The Sternsche Gesangverein gave a first Concert at the new Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church on the 4th ult., when Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" was given, this being the anniversary of the death of its composer. Professor Gernsheim conducted a very fine performance, and Dr. Reimann presided at the organ. The acoustic conditions of the new edifice are found to be excellent.—Mr. Harold Bauer made his début here in an Orchestral Concert at the Singakademie, on the 16th ult., and scored quite an exceptional success both with the press and the public. He played, with orchestra, a Concerto of Beethoven, a Concerto of Saint-Saëns, and the "Hungarian" Fantasia of Liszt. The German critics are unanimous and enthusiastic in his praise, comparing his technique to that of Rosenthal, and speaking highly of his warmth of feeling and artistic interpretations.

BRUSSELS.—The annual Grand Prix de Rome at the Conservatoire has been awarded this year to M. A. Lunsens, a native of Brussels, for a choral work entitled "Calliclivé," a composition, it is said, of altogether exceptional merit. For the first time in the history of the Institution, a lady, Mdlle. Henriette Coclet, took part in the competition, and would in all probability have obtained the second prize but for the fact of the score sent in by her not being completed in its instrumentation.—Under the directorship of M. Ysaÿe, a society has been formed for the purpose of giving an annual series of Concerts during the season (four symphonic and four of chamber music) in this capital. The quartet party will consist of MM. Ysaÿe, Marchot, van Hout, and Jacob. The announcement has given great satisfaction in musical circles here.—M. Gevaert has received from Pope Leo XIII. the order of St. Gregory the Great in recognition of the merits of his recently published work, "La Mélodie antique dans l'Eglise latine."

BUDAPEST.—Herr Mader, of Vienna, has been appointed to the post of conductor at the Royal Hungarian Opera, in succession to Herr Arthur Nikisch.—Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" has just been produced here for the hundredth time, under the personal direction of the composer, who was most enthusiastically received.

BUFFALO (U.S.)—The well known Polish pianist, Chevalier de Kontski, after living here for some years past in comparative retirement, has started upon a concert tour in Japan. The veteran artist, upon whom his seventy-eight years appear to sit very lightly, has taken with him a new "Japanese Triumphant March" of his composition, which will doubtless gain him the suffrages of the victorious Japs, especially if played on his famous pianoforte with the double keyboard.

CHRISTIANIA.—Edvard Grieg has nearly completed the score of an important new work for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, entitled "Hang Tussa," the performance of which will fill an entire evening.

COBURG.—The death centenary of Georg Benda was commemorated, on the 6th ult., at the Court Theatre, by a performance of the melodrama "Medea." Benda, at one time Capellmeister at Gotha, the most gifted of four musical brothers, was the first to introduce melodrama in Germany, and his two works of that order, "Medea" and "Ariadne," were greatly admired by Mozart, who considered the music to be "wahrhaft türefreilich" (truly excellent), especially that accompanying the spoken lines.

COLOGNE.—An important new composition, by Herr Richard Strauss, the orchestral tone-picture "Till Eulenspiegel," was produced last month for the first time at a Gürzenich Concert, under Dr. Wüllner's direction. The new work of the gifted Munich conductor was generally admitted to be a masterpiece of orchestral painting, the graphic delineation of the various escapades of the legendary humorous personage being frequently greeted with expressions of delight by the audience. It will also shortly be performed at Vienna, under Dr. Hans Richter.—Mr. Willy Hess played with the greatest success in two Chamber Music Concerts on October 29 and the 12th ult. He also played the Beethoven Concerto, with orchestra, at the second Gürzenich Concert, on the 5th ult.

CONSTANCE.—A choral symphony, entitled "Through night to light," by the late Friedrich Lux, the distinguished Mayence Capellmeister and organ virtuoso, was performed here for the first time in public, on October 25, Herr Werner, of Baden-Baden, presiding at the organ. The interesting and valuable work, which is of a sacred character, created a profound impression.

DESSAU.—Reznick's comic opera "Donna Diana" has just been produced here and met with a highly favourable reception, at the Court Theatre. Similar success attended the recent first performance of the work at Leipzig. It was originally brought out at Carlsruhe, under Herr Mottl's direction, last season.

FLORENCE.—Signor Tamagno, the celebrated tenor, still confined to his villa on account of illness and has been obliged to abandon his contemplated visit to Berlin, where he was to make his début at the Royal Opera.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.—An excellent performance place at one of the "Museum Concerts" recently Tschaikowsky's "Manfred" Symphony, under the direction of Capellmeister Kogel, the work meeting with an enthusiastic reception. In the same Concert Mr. Ben Davi made his first appearance here, and particularly delighted his audience in his singing of an air from Han "Jephtha."

GENEVA.—The committee of the Swiss National Exhibition, to be held next year, have commissioned the young composer M. Jacques Dalcroze to write an opera for the occasion. The same composer's grand opera "Sancho Pansa" is shortly to be brought out at the theatre here.

HAMBURG.—There will be eight Concerts here this season of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, the first of which has just taken place with great success, under the direction of Herr Weingartner.

LEIPZIG.—Dr. Hugo Riemann, the well known musical author, lately of Wiesbaden, has taken up his residence here as pianoforte teacher and lecturer at the University on the theory and history of music.—Handel's oratorio "Deborah," in Dr. Chrysander's version of the score, is shortly to be produced at one of the Gewandhaus Concerts, under Herr Nikisch's direction. The Riedel Verein will likewise give a performance of the work later in the season.—Alexander Petchnikoff, the Russian violinist, gave a Concert here last month, and, as had been the case on his recent first appearance in Berlin, took his critically-disposed audience by storm, he being equally admired in Bach as in pieces of a lighter order.—Herr Nikisch, in addition to his duties as conductor of the Gewandhaus and the Berlin Philharmonic Concerts, has undertaken to conduct several Concerts at Moscow and at Prague during the winter.

MILAN.—The coming season at La Scala is to be inaugurated with a performance of M. Saint-Saëns's opera "Henri VIII.," M. Massenet's "La Navarraise" being next on the répertoire, and will be given in conjunction with Tchaikowsky's charming ballet "The Sleeping Beauty."—The long-expected première of the two-act opera "Claudia," by the Maestro Gellio Coronaro, the libretto founded upon Georges Sand's novel of that name, took place on the 5th ult., at the Teatro Lirico. The performance was a good one, but the work failed to please, the libretto being found weak and the music wanting in dramatic elements.

MUNICH.—The violin virtuoso, Henry Such, appeared at one of the Kaim Concerts, under the direction of the Court conductor, Zumppe, on the 7th ult., with brilliant success. The young artist proceeded at once to Vienna, where he was to play under the directorship of Dr. Hans Richter on the 21st ult.—Heinrich Vogl, the eminent tenor, celebrated, on the 5th ult., the thirtieth anniversary of his association with the Munich Opera, where he made his début as Max, in "Der Freischütz," in 1865. Vogl did not at first give promise of being able to undertake the more heroic parts; but his powers rapidly grew with the greater demands made upon them, and his assumption, in 1869, of the part of Tristan in Wagner's opera was a revelation which was not lost upon the composer, who entrusted to him the difficult rôle of Loge, in "Rheingold," at the original Bayreuth Festspiele in 1876. Since that time Vogl has justly been looked upon, both vocally and historically, as the Wagner tenor par excellence. That he remains in that position to this day speaks well both of his vocal method and of his physique.

NÜRNBERG.—At a Concert given on the 3rd ult., by the Verein für klassischen Chorgesang—an excellent choral society, numbering some 330 well-trained voices—a new choral work, entitled "König-Rother," by Herr Krug-Waldsee, was performed for the first time, under the composer's direction, and aroused the enthusiasm of the audience to a degree only equalled by that which manifestly pervaded the ranks of the executants. Needless to add that the gifted composer received a perfect ovation at the conclusion of a truly notable performance.

PESARO.—It is creditably reported here that Mascagni has been offered and has accepted the post of director of the Liceo Rossini in this town, the most richly endowed musical school in Italy. The offer was supported by a unanimity of votes of the committee.

PRAGUE.—Antonín Dvořák will, it is stated, not resume his position as Principal of the National Conservatorium in New York, but has decided, for domestic reasons, to remain at Prague during the winter.—Three operatic novelties were produced at the German Theatre here during the past few weeks—viz., "Die Sängerin," by Dellinger; "Der Geigenmacher von Cremona," by Jeno Hubay; and "Hunyadi Laszlo," by Franz Erckel. The latter, although produced many years since at Budapest, was a novelty in the composer's native country and was favourably received. M. Hubay's is a melodious work, ably instrumented, and pleased greatly. An incidental violin solo, admirably played by the composer behind the scenes, had to be repeated. Dellinger's operetta, of the Viennese type, is ably written, but wanting in originality.

ROME.—Signora Teresina Tua, the gifted violinist, who retired into private life upon her marriage some years ago with the Count Franchi-Verney della Valetta, is about to re-appear in public, having arranged for an extensive concert tour throughout Europe and America.—Messrs. Cesari and Graciose have taken the lease of the Teatro Argentina, and will receive an annual subvention from the municipality of eight thousand lire. In return, the new directors are required to open the performances with Wagner's "Die Walküre," and to produce the following works during the season—viz., Verdi's "Don Carlos," Wagner's "Tannhäuser," Leoncavallo's "La Bohème," Boito's "Mefistofele," and a new opera by Di Leva, entitled "La Camargo." Signor Mascheroni will be the orchestral conductor.

ST. PETERSBURG.—Dr. Max Erdmannsdörfer, of Bremen, who has just celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his activity as Capellmeister, has accepted the conductorship of the Imperial Russian Philharmonic Society. He conducted his first Concert here on the 2nd ult., and met with a most cordial reception.—Tanejew's new opera, "Orestea" (founded upon Æschylus's drama), was produced at the Imperial Opera for the first time last month. The work, which had been looked forward to with considerable interest, proved somewhat of a disappointment, being diffuse as regards the libretto, deficient in melody, and over-elaborate in its instrumentation. Costumes, scenery, and the entire mise-en-scène, however, are magnificent, and will support the opera in the repertory for some time to come.—Madame Sigrid Arnoldson has signed an engagement to appear in opera during the months of January and February next, both here and at Moscow.—The first volume of a most interesting collection of Russian folk-songs has just been published, ably edited by Professor Sobolevsky. The publication is taking place at the instigation and at the expense of the Grand Duke George Michalowitch.

STUTTGART.—The first performance of Pietro Mascagni's new opera "William Ratcliff" took place on October 27, at the Hof-Theater, and met with a very good reception. The composer, who was present on the occasion, has received the gold medal for Arts and Sciences from the King of Wurtemberg. Mascagni is just now giving a series of Concerts in different parts of Germany and Austria, conducting his own works, and meeting everywhere with much appreciation.

VENICE.—The vacant directorship of the Liceo Benedetto Marcello has at length been filled by the appointment to that important post of Signor Enrico Bossi, hitherto Professor of harmony and counterpoint at the Naples Conservatorio, a gifted composer and excellent organist.

VIENNA.—The members of the Dresden Royal Opera who recently took part in the resuscitation, at that Institution, of Haydn's comic opera, "Der Apotheker" ("Lo Speciale"), gave a morning performance of the work here last month, under the direction of their Capellmeister, Herr Schuch. It was received by a numerous audience with the kindly interest due (especially from the Viennese public) to a score by Papa Haydn, however deficient in dramatic elements, and wedded to a libretto somewhat archaic in its simplicity. Considerable historical interest, moreover, attached to a performance which, in the opinion of Dr. Hanslick, was a model one.—Frau Materna, the well-known prima donna, has departed for the United States, where she is to give a series of forty "Farewell" Concerts, she being a great favourite with American audiences.

WEIMAR.—Herr Bernhard Stavenhagen, the new Capellmeister of the Hof-Theater, hitherto known only in his capacity of pianist, has proved himself an excellent conductor in recent performances of Wagner's "Der fliegende Holländer" and "Lohengrin," and Liszt's "St. Elizabeth," the latter produced as a stage representation. Herr Zöllner's new military opera, "Der Ueberfall," has also just been brought out here, under Herr Stavenhagen's direction, with considerable success.

ZÜRICH.—The new "Tonhalle," a handsome and spacious building, was inaugurated, on October 20, with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, conducted by Dr. Hegar, and Brahms's "Triumphlied," under the direction of the composer. Dr. Joachim also took part in one of the concerts organised for the occasion.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SINCE its first production here at the Musical Festival of 1882, Gounod's sacred Trilogy, "The Redemption," has deservedly been recognised as one of the standard oratorios, and never fails to draw large audiences whenever it is performed. For some years now the Midland Musical Society is accustomed to resort to "The Redemption" for its annual "Good Friday" Concert, and has thus been the means of popularising the trilogy among our artisan classes, who are now as familiar with "The Redemption" as they are with "The Messiah" or the "Elijah." But it is only periodically that the Festival Choral Society include Gounod's work in its concert schemes; and the committee are to be congratulated for having opened the season of 1895-6 with a magnificent all-round performance of "The Redemption," which took place in our Town Hall on October 24, in the presence of a crowded assembly. Special interest was attached to the Concert, as it happened to be the Jubilee of the Society, and at which Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap, the new conductor who has succeeded Mr Stockley, wielded the bâton. His reception as he stepped on the concert platform was cordial in the extreme, the prolonged applause being conspicuous by its spontaneity, emanating from all parts of the hall. He at once proved himself an experienced conductor, by his thorough command over his forces and sound knowledge of the work. The beautiful symphonic accompaniments, a feature of the oratorio, were given with graphic picturesqueness, and to my mind our local orchestra never played better than on this occasion. The singing of the chorus was marked by tone-power and precision, and throughout the work the same high standard was maintained. Excellent and artistic service was rendered by the principals—Miss Medora Henson, Miss Constance Yorke, Madame Marie Hooton, Mr. Whitney Mockbridge, Mr. S. Roper, Mr. David Hughes, Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, and Mr. C. W. Perkins, the latter admirably sustaining the chorus by his judicious management of the organ.

Monsieur De Greef, the Belgian pianist, gave a Piano-forte Recital in the Masonic Hall, which proved an artistic, if not a financial success. His programme was admirably framed and was calculated to show the gifted pianist's special style. It is rarely that Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques" and Grieg's scenes "Aus dem Norwegischen Volksleben" have been interpreted here with more characteristic effect. His playing caused great enthusiasm, and when he visits this city again, which I believe will be early next year, he will be able to command a full house.

The greatest musical treat of the present season is due to Dr. Hans Richter and his orchestra. Nine years have elapsed since the Viennese conductor has honoured us by bringing his London orchestra, and I can only express a wish that his visits in the future may be more frequent and that he may see his way clear to come to us annually. The programme, with the exception of Tchaikowsky's "Symphonie Pathétique," consisted entirely of excerpts from the works of Wagner, of which the "Trauermarsch," from "Die Götterdämmerung," was a novelty here. To dwell upon Dr. Richter's marvellous reading of Wagner would be futile. With him all is perfect, and we in the provinces never heard the "Flying Dutchman" Overture nor the "Tannhäuser" Overture given with such fire and animation. The Tchaikowsky Symphony, given as it was, proved a revelation to the audience, as it has done everywhere else. Mr. Edward Lloyd, who was the vocalist, gave the Prelied from "Die Meistersinger" in true Wagnerian method.

The Saturday Night Popular Concerts for the people are now in full swing, and excellent service is rendered by the various amateur choral societies, who give oratorios in a complete form, with full chorus, band, principals, and organ.

Mr. H. Wymark Stratton gave his first Concert in the Masonic Hall, and was fortunate to gather round him his numerous friends and patrons. The programme included Goetz's Quintet (Op. 16) for piano-forte and strings and Beethoven's beautiful Septet for strings and wind (Op. 20). The bénéficiaire appeared as solo pianist, accompanist, and bassoonist, duties which he discharged with much credit to himself. Miss Annie Norledge was the vocalist, and Mr. T. M. Abbott, solo violinist. The whole Concert proved a complete success.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE recent Concerts in Bristol and district have been of a miscellaneous order. Glee and part-songs were capitally sung at a Concert in St. Paul's School, Bedminster, on October 23. Mr. Herbert Parsons, an exceptionally talented local pianist, gave a successful Recital on October 24, when he played, for the first time in Bristol, Liszt's Sonata in B minor, among other compositions.

The first popular Chamber Concert of the eleventh season took place on October 26, under favourable circumstances. The executants were Miss Rootham, Messrs. F. Ward, H. Bernard, F. S. Gardner, and E. Pavey, and the vocalist was Mr. A. Trowbridge. A noticeable feature was an exceptionally meritorious performance of Beethoven's String Quartet (Op. 18, No. 4).

Señor Sarasate and Madame Berthe Marx-Goldschmidt appeared on the 8th ult. and gained a very hearty reception from a large assemblage of professionals and amateurs, whom they delighted by their interpretation of compositions of the classic and romantic schools.

Benson's new prize cantata, entitled "Christ at Nain," and Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" were sung in Redland Park Church on October 30.

Miss Lock's first Chamber Concert of the present season, on the 11th ult., was a very great success. Beethoven's String Quartet in E flat (Op. 74, No. 10), Max Bruch's Trio in C minor (Op. 5) for piano-forte and strings, and Schumann's Sonata in A minor (Op. 105) were the chief works performed, the Trio being now first heard in Bristol. The executants were Messrs. Theo. Carrington, Duys, Wetten, Van Gelder, and Miss Lock. Madame Isabel George contributed songs.

The Concert given by Miss Amy Lavington, at St. Nathaniel's Hall, on the 14th ult., is worthy of notice because of the excellence of the music as a whole. The lady, herself a talented harpist, was assisted by some of the most accomplished professionals and amateurs of the city.

The lamented death of Sir Charles Hallé, who for more than twenty years was Conductor of the Bristol Musical Festivals—since their establishment, in fact—has called forth expressions of deep regret from various musical bodies in our city. The sad event has also led to considerable agitation and speculation regarding the successor to the deceased musician. The local papers have published voluminous correspondence regarding the subject, the majority of the writers advocating the appointment of Mr. George Riseley, who has directed choral and orchestral performances of a high character for many years. In the course of some remarks to the Festival choir regarding the choice of a conductor, Mr. William Smith, the chairman of the Festival committee, denied that there was prejudice against local talent, and said that everything had gone by tender, local musicians being given a chance equal to that afforded other people. They wanted to get the best man at reasonable terms, and with that end in view the committee would enter into communication with the most eminent conductors. As the Festival takes place next October the selection of a successor to Sir Charles Hallé cannot be long delayed; and the musical public of Bristol are looking forward with great interest and expectancy to the result of the committee's deliberations.

The Bristol Post Office Band Concert, on the 20th ult., was a great success.

As the Concert of the Bristol Choral Society took place late in the month, brief notice of the performance must suffice. A large audience assembled in Colston Hall on the 23rd ult., to hear the choir, which, with band, numbered 500, unfold the beauties of Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" (now brought forward in our city after lying dormant for many years) and of Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana." The principal vocalists were Miss Esther Palliser, Mr. Joseph O'Mara, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The singing of the choir, under the direction of Mr. Riseley, was very fine; and the charming melodious works afforded great delight to the assemblage, so admirable was their performance as a whole.

The project to establish a new musical association at Clevedon has been successful. It is called the Philharmonic Society. Sir Edmund Elton is president, and Mr. Edward Cook, of Bristol, conductor. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" is in rehearsal.

The annual Festival of the Bath and Wells Diocesan Choral Association took place in Bath Abbey on October 30. Nearly thirty choirs were represented, the total number of voices being 600. Under the direction of Mr. Standley, the musical service, including Barnby's anthem "I will give thanks," was creditably sung; the enlarged organ, just completed, played by Mr. A. E. New, being of great advantage in sustaining the body of voices.

The first system of the musical score features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment consisting of a grand staff (treble and bass clef). The key signature is three sharps (F#, C#, G#) and the time signature is common time (C). The lyrics are: "Lord for ev-er: for in the Lord Je-ho-vah is ev-er-last-ing strength." The piano part provides a harmonic foundation with chords and moving lines in both hands.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Dublin Popular Concerts, under the management and control of Mr. Farley Sinkins and Messrs. Pigott, commenced on Saturday, October 26, in the Leinster Hall. The vocalists were the sisters Ravogli, Madame Ghitti Corri, Messrs. Thorndyke and Orlando Harley—the last taking the place of Mr. Sims Reeves; and the instrumentalists, Messrs. Arthur Wallerstein (violin), Otto Moss-hammer (harp), and Adolph Schmid (pianoforte). Notwithstanding the disappointment felt at the absence of Mr. Sims Reeves it was a most enjoyable and successful Concert. Dr. Houston Collisson conducted.

The second of the above series took place in the same hall on the 16th ult., with Mesdames Chatto, Marie Duma, Florence Daly, and Stella Frazer; Messrs. Foli, Braxton Smith, Della Sudda, and Rubio. The accompanists were Dr. Collisson and Mr. Lorraine.

Madame Fanny Moody and Mr. Charles Manners gave three Concerts and Opera Recitals in the Leinster Hall, on October 23, 24, and 25, and were assisted by Miss Rayner, Mr. William Dever, Mr. John Child, and a small orchestra. An interesting feature was the production of Maclean's prize one-act opera, "Petrucchio," which met with considerable acceptance. Madame Patti appeared at two Concerts in the Leinster Hall, on October 30 and the 2nd ult., assisted by Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Hirwen Jones, Mr. Douglas Powell, and Misses Marianne and Clara Eissler (violin and harp), Mr. Frederick Dawson (pianoforte), and Mr. Wilhelm Ganz (accompanist).

The Recitals of Chamber Music at the Royal Dublin Society opened, on the 11th ult., with a Pianoforte Recital by Signor Esposito. Liszt's transcription of Bach's G minor Organ Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 101), and four pieces of Chopin made up the programme and were brilliantly interpreted. For the second Recital, on the 18th ult., Messrs. Papini, Darley, Grisard, Bast, and Esposito were engaged, Mr. Darley, as second violin, replacing Mr. P. Delany, whose health obliged his retirement. Haydn's Quartet (Op. 67, No. 5) and Brahms's Quartet in G minor (strings and pianoforte), with Beethoven's Violin Sonata in F (Op. 24), were presented to a crowded assembly.

The Leinster Choral Union gave a Glee Concert at the Molesworth Hall on the 5th ult.; and the Concert by the inmates of Merion Blind Asylum in the Leinster Hall, on the following evening, was remarkable for the variety and excellence of musical ability displayed.

The Dublin Musical Society has in rehearsal Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" for its approaching Concert, under Dr. Joseph Smith, and announces for future performance Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," selections from "Tannhäuser," and Sullivan's "Light of the World," which last, it is understood, the composer will conduct in person.

Sullivan's "Inaugural Ode" was announced for performance, with full band and chorus, at the opening of the Irish Arts' and Crafts' Exhibition, on the 26th ult., in the Royal Victoria Buildings.

MUSIC IN EAST ANGLIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE tenth annual Concert on behalf of the funds of the Railway Guards' Universal Friendly Society, on the 24th ult., was a great success, both musically and financially. Miss Kate Cove, Miss Grace Woodward, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Santley were the vocalists, and Miss Beatrice Langley and Signor Bisaccia were answerable for violin and pianoforte solos.

The winter season of the weekly popular Organ Recitals, which are conducted by Dr. Bunnett, with the assistance of a small committee of gentlemen appointed by the Corporation, commenced on Saturday evening, the 2nd ult. Proof of the popularity of these Recitals was shown by the crowded state of St. Andrew's Hall, and it is believed they are doing much to popularise good music. The organ selections are generally varied by songs and solos upon other instruments, the former being supplied on this occasion by Miss Evelyn Ray and Mr. S. Hemmings, while Mr. F. W. B. Noverre contributed several violin solos.

The Westminster Singers made their début in Norwich on the 7th ult., at a Concert of English songs and glees, organised for the benefit of one of the poorer parishes in the city. The singing of these gentlemen at once gave them a high place in public favour. Mrs. Trust sang some old songs by Hook, Dibdin, &c., with her usual taste and delicacy, and the Rev. C. W. James (a local amateur) added variety and interest by playing Arne's first and third Sonatas for harpsichord, which had a truly refreshing sound in these days of pianoforte worrying and noise.

The first of a series of five Concerts devoted more especially to chamber music was given at King's Lynn, on the afternoon of the 2nd ult., the works selected being Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in F (Op. 24), Mendelssohn's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello in C minor (Op. 66), and Schubert's Pianoforte Duet in A (Op. 107). The following were the executants: Mr. H. B. Collins and Mr. A. H. Cross (pianoforte), Mr. F. W. B. Noverre (violin), and Mr. P. Chignell (violoncello). Mr. A. H. Cross was also heard in several songs.

The Wymondham Musical Society gave an Invitation Concert to a large audience on the 13th ult. The programme was filled by members of the Society, and the various vocal and instrumental pieces were given with commendable care and judgment. Mr. Algernon S. Wilde conducted and also occupied the position of accompanist.

The spread of musical culture in our agricultural districts has been recently illustrated by the foundation of a Choral Society at Pulham Market, a village in Norfolk containing about a thousand inhabitants. The Rector of the parish (Rev. S. Fellows) was appointed President, and the Society commenced practice with thirty-three members, a highly satisfactory beginning.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

DR. RICHTER'S Concert, which was given too late for mention in last month's notice, made a splendid overture to Messrs. Paterson's winter scheme of Orchestral Concerts. The Tschaiakowsky "Pathetic" Symphony in particular made a very deep impression. The other numbers on the programme were all by Wagner. Mr. Lloyd's singing in "Am Stillen Herd" and in "Lohengrin's Farewell" was a great treat.

The Scottish Orchestra made its first appearance in Scotland under its new conductor, M. Kes, on the 11th ult., when a large audience assembled in the Music Hall to extend a hearty welcome to the Dutch musician. Some change in the quantity, and also perhaps in the quality of the orchestra, quite as much as the inadequate opportunity for rehearsal, was the cause of a rather rough rendering of the "Magic Flute" and "Die verkaufte Braut" Overtures. But the reason of an exasperatingly somnolent reading of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony must be sought elsewhere; the Allegretto in particular was invested with a weight and a clumsiness which vividly recalled many caricatures of M. Kes's countrymen.

At the second Concert, on the 18th ult., a most gratifying improvement was to be observed. The regiment of instrumentalists was nearer its full complement; the new instruments with the lower standard of pitch had become familiar to the players, who were also more at home in their new but ineffective disposition, and conductor and orchestra were more in sympathy. In consequence the certainty of the "Ruy Blas" Overture, the delicacy of Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" Suite, as well as the fire and excitement of Tschaiakowsky's "Overture Solennelle" secured by M. Kes, reflected the greatest credit on the patience and skill of all concerned and were full of promise for the remaining Concerts of the series. Madame Teresa Careño created great enthusiasm by her executive attainments in Grieg's A minor Concerto, and in pieces by Beethoven, Chopin, and Liszt.

On the 2nd ult. Madame Albani and a concert party presented a typical ballad programme to a fairly good audience, which, to judge from the number of enthusiastic encores granted, seemed to enjoy the invertebrate ditties.

Two interesting Vocal Recitals were given on the 5th and on the 6th ult., by Mr. A. B. Bach and by Miss May Gibb. Mr. Bach was assisted by very capable pupils, among whom the best was Miss Pillans. Mrs. Bach accompanied with her usual taste and skill.

Miss May Gibb, a pupil of Mr. Henschel, made a very successful début. Her songs were chosen from the works of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Grieg, and other "art song" writers, and in each of her efforts she showed evidences of real artistic insight as well as of sound training. Mr. Denhof contributed pianoforte solos to the programme.

The arrangements for the Annual Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, to be held during the first days of the new year, are in an advanced state, and if they are successfully carried out the Conference bids fair to eclipse all previous Conferences of the Society. A reception by the Lord Provost and Magistrates, a Concert at which the "Cotter's Saturday Night" is to be given by the Choral Union and the Scottish Orchestra, under the bâton of the composer; a performance of MacCunn's "Land of the Mountain and the Flood" Overture, and Dr. Mackenzie's "Pibroch" (Mr. John Dunn) in the same programme; a concert and ball in the Waterloo Rooms; a banquet; and numerous meetings, presided over by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Mr. Randegger, Professor Niecks, and others, ought to prove as stimulating as they promise to be interesting and important. Further éclat will be given by the University conferring the honorary degree of Mus. Doc. on our distinguished townsman, Sir A. C. Mackenzie.

The Edinburgh Bach Society opened its eighth session on the 6th ult., when fully one hundred members assembled to hear a programme comprising pianoforte solos, a flute sonata, songs, &c., and a paper on "Recent Likenesses of Bach," by the President, Mr. Franklin Peterson.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On the 5th ult. Mendelssohn was in evidence on the banks of the Clyde. His "Son and Stranger" was in the bills of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, and if the Singespil failed to attract opera-goers to the Theatre Royal, more solid fare was provided at St. Andrew's Hall, where the Choral and Orchestral Union inaugurated its season with the first part of "St. Paul," the Motet "Hear my Prayer," and the 42nd Psalm. Mendelssohn has many faithful followers in Glasgow, and on the occasion under brief notice our premier choral society once more distinguished itself. The balance of tone was admirable, the behests of the conductor, Mr. Joseph Bradley, were observed with more than usual care, and it was soon, indeed, apparent that the Choral Union had prepared itself for a fine performance of each number in the programme. Miss Margaret Macintyre sang the soprano solos with rare artistic perception, and Miss M. W. Fyfe, Messrs. Grover and Price also did ample justice to their share of the evening's work. Mr. Berry had adequate charge of the organ accompaniments, and the Scottish Orchestra added considerably to the success of the Concert. The new conductor of the last-named organisation, Mr. Willem Kes, made his first bow to a Glasgow audience on the 12th ult. He had every reason to feel gratified with the cordiality of his reception, and the friendship thus early accorded the accomplished Dutch musician seemed to be cemented after the performance of his "Hymn of National Songs," a sort of pièce d'occasion by which Mr. Kes "desired to introduce himself and to offer his greetings to the Glasgow public." Beethoven's Symphony in A, Brahms's "Academic Festival" Overture, the ever-delightful Scherzo from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet," and Smetana's bright and stimulating Overture to "The Bartered Bride" were in the programme, and Miss Giulia Ravogli contributed operatic airs to the entire satisfaction of her large audience. This season's band of eighty performers, and again led by Mr. Sons, shows some changes in its personnel. There can, however, be no doubt as to the excellent quality of the material.

The first Popular Concert of the season took place on the 16th ult. There were solos for Mr. Sons, Mr. Halstead (flute), Mr. Mills (clarinet), Miss Thudichum sang, and a programme suitable in every way to the character of these Saturday Evening Concerts was submitted.

At the Classical Concert, on the 19th ult., Madame Teresa Carreño made her first appearance here, selecting for her début Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor. The programme otherwise included Bizet's Suite for orchestra, "L'Arlesienne," and Tchaikowsky's "Overture Solennelle." Regrettably enough, the Chamber Concerts under the auspices of the Scottish Orchestra Company have been abandoned, owing to the very inadequate support accorded the scheme.

Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" created a great impression during the engagement of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company. The work, in its operatic dress, had not been heard in Glasgow for many years, and as the cast included Miss Ella Russell and Mr. Ludwig in parts so congenial to these artists, it goes without saying that the revival of the opera was a distinct success.

A very large and representative company met Mr. Kes on the 6th ult., when he was entertained at dinner by the Glasgow Society of Musicians, and on the following evening the West of Scotland section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians gave an interesting Concert in the Windsor Hotel.

The couple of musical Recitals, given on the 12th and 14th ult., in the Coats Memorial Church, Paisley, served to introduce Mr. Lee Williams's short cantata "The Last Night at Bethany," a work which ought to secure popularity amongst the smaller choral societies. The Recitals were under the direction of Mr. Montague Smith, and Dr. A. H. Mann, of King's College, Cambridge, presided at the organ.

At the Lambeth Memorial Concert, held in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 15th ult., an interesting programme was sustained by Dr. A. L. Peace, Mr. Allan Macbeth, and many other leading artists.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two choral performances on a large scale have to be recorded during the past month. One of these took place at the third Concert of the Philharmonic Society, when Handel's "Alexander's Feast" and Goring Thomas's "The Swan and the Skylark" were given with excellent effect. Professor C. Villiers Stanford, who orchestrated the latter work after the death of its composer, was happily elected to conduct the Concert, vice the late Sir Charles Hallé, in memory of whom Handel's Dead March in "Saul" was played prior to the Concert.

The other choral effort named consisted of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," by the Musical Society, under Mr. D. O. Parry, in connection with which it may be stated that the choruses in general were admirably sung, but the whole effort would have been of a higher order of merit had more adequate orchestral aid been rendered.

At the fourth Concert of the Philharmonic series, Mr. F. H. Cowen, who conducted, received a most cordial welcome from his many Liverpool friends, and under his guidance an admirable rendering of Beethoven's C minor Symphony, together with other important numbers, was accorded. In fact, the scene of enthusiasm which followed the performance of the great work named above and resulted in the recall of Mr. Cowen from the artists' room is probably without parallel under similar circumstances during, at least, a quarter of a century's experience of Philharmonic Concerts. Mr. David Popper contributed violoncello solos and the vocalists were Miss Petersen and Mr. Thomas Barlow, the latter, an excellent local tenor, making a special mark in Purcell's "Sound an alarm," the solitary contribution to the bi-centenary celebration of the English musician.

It now appears that Mr. Rodewald has definitely taken up the conductorship of the Società Armonica, a matter upon which the members of this fine old organisation may be congratulated. The Concert given on October 29 revealed a new order of things, and after a somewhat perturbed existence of late the revivification of the Society may be set down as an accomplished fact. The same Conductor directed a capital performance of Schubert's C major Symphony at the second Smoking Concert of the Liverpool Orchestral Society, on the 16th ult. At the Sunday Concerts in St. George's Hall, chamber music, on the 3rd ult., was followed on the two subsequent Sundays by orchestral works, in connection with which performances were given of Mendelssohn's "Italian" and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphonies, under Mr. Argent.

The third of the excellent series of Winter Entertainments took place in the Philharmonic Hall on the 13th ult., when a programme of varied and novel character was presented. The artists comprised Mrs. Helen Trust, the Misses Salter, Mr. William Green, Mr. Douglas Powell, and a very admirable flautist, Mr. Lemonné, who was especially successful. Mrs. Trust made a most excellent effect with Bishop's "Lo! here the gentle lark," with Mr. Lemonné's obbligato, and Mr. Douglas Powell's singing of Sullivan's "Thou'rt passing hence," with organ obbligato, was warmly encored. The novelty consisted in the introduction of recitations and duologues by Mr. Charles Fry and Miss Olive Kennett, the former introducing Poe's "Bells" and the latter Kingsley's "Lorraine, Lorraine," with Mr. Stanley Hawley's musical accompaniment. Miss Kennett's fine voice was much appreciated, and Mr. Fry gave a particularly impressive rendering of Tennyson's "Revenge." Mr. H. A. Branscombe was the accompanist.

Messrs. Harrison have given another of their Popular Concerts, Mr. T. Shaw has done the same at Hope Hall, and Mr. Plunket Greene and Mr. Steudner-Welsing have given one of their delightful Recitals at the Philharmonic Hall.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE general feeling of bereavement which has pervaded this city during the past month, and has only to a slight degree lightened, testifies how thoroughly and warmly an English public will sympathise with those who render long and faithful service. By the most sudden death of Sir Charles Hallé on the very eve of the commencement of a new season, when expectation was keen of the renewal of the pleasures which, through so many winters, have cheered and delighted us, we lost a man in whom were blended qualities so seldom found combined in one person as to appear almost irreconcilable—a remarkable union of a moderately artistic sensibility with an almost unsurpassed shrewdness of business aptitude, with a coolness and presence of mind proved to be not inconsistent with a love of the past full of reminiscent charm, and with a cherishing of the traditions of a bygone generation. This caused him to seem to us to be the last remaining link binding our time with that of men whose names dwell with us as household words, and concerning whom every anecdote and every scrap of information must be interesting. Into his grasp had fallen the reins from so many hands that he had come to be regarded, in this county at least, as one having an almost irresistible power in our little musical world; and it is not too much to say that during the last month no question has more occupied the minds of the community than that of the lamentable break which was made on that unhappy Friday morning in October in the continuity of the development of an art especially dear to us. It is yet too early calmly to review the history of nearly half-a-century and to estimate its effect; but the feeling is irresistible and general that an important chapter has closed, and that many and great changes must soon come, some tending to the advancement of and, perhaps, some rather hindering progress. The control of the so recently established College of Music has been confided to an able and genial musician thoroughly conversant with the routine of the larger continental schools and zealous as a teacher. Herr Adolph Brodsky, who has already been recognised among us as a violinist of high attainment, will, it is understood, as speedily as possible relieve himself from such engagements as would tend to divide his interest and to take him away from work of far greater importance than mere concert-playing or directing. No other alterations have yet been made; but it is to be hoped that the completion and consolidation of the College may now be secured so far as is possible while the Institution remains outside such association with our municipal and educational schemes as may, alone, promise permanence.

As regards the Concerts, it was a pleasing token of respect toward his departed friend that Sir Arthur Sullivan at once complied with the general wish that he would, as our representative musician, take the direction of the first meeting of those who had for thirty-seven seasons enthusiastically welcomed the re-appearance of their old chief after a well-earned holiday. But it was unavoidable that over the densely-packed assembly a sense of personal loss should throw a gloom which could not be lifted when the last strains of the "In Memoriam" Overture died away, nor entirely dispelled throughout the whole evening. Following the visits of Sir Arthur and of Dr. Stanford have been those of Sir Joseph Barnby, to conduct Berlioz's "Faust," and of Mr. Cowen, and, until permanent arrangements may be made, a select number of our most popular English and some continental musicians will, in turn, wield the bâton which has fallen from the grasp of one who, alone, could have established and so long supported such a series of celebrations of the highest class. On the 28th, the performance of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was under the control of the able choir director, Mr. R. H. Wilson.

Turning from this mournful but engrossing subject, I must very briefly record that, at the second of the musical evenings of the Schiller Anstalt, so capably organised by Mr. Carl Fuchs, Herr Brodsky gave us his first public demonstration of his great ability as a leader in ensemble playing, and that the strongest hope was excited that at last chamber music may find a peculiarly suitable home among us.

Mr. Lane has followed the performance of Gounod's "Faust" and Mascagni's "Rustic Chivalry" by a presentation of "Elijah," which his Philharmonic Choir sang with a vigour and fulness of tone not previously attained by that body. At this moment it is especially important that everything should be encouraged which may tend to advance choral music after a long continued apathy and in the prospect of changes which could not promise any great re-awakening. Musical interest attached to the performance because Miss Macintyre made her first appearance here in oratorio, for which she has undoubted qualification. Of late, however, she appears to have been under some guidance which has led her to an unnecessary forcing of the high register of her voice, a practice hurtful to herself as well as painful to the listener.

A special line must be devoted to the Jubilee Recital of "Maritana," on the 16th ult., at the 344th entertainment of Mr. Cross, and to the first appearance in Manchester of a tenor who has recently attracted much attention in and about Liverpool. Mr. H. Berrey (of St. Helen's) is endowed with a very powerful and sympathetic tenor voice, of ample range; and he would certainly find it immensely to his interest to pursue diligently the culture which his voice has already received.

MUSIC IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

THE second of the Meakin Concerts was held at the Victoria Hall on the 4th ult., when Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Meredith Elliott, Mr. Charles Chiley, Mr. D. Frangon-Davies, and Herr Felix Dreyschock contributed to an enjoyable programme.

On the 10th ult. Mayor's Sunday was observed at Stoke, Hanley, and Burslem. Special music was provided by Mr. Sherratt (Stoke), Mr. J. A. MacGregor (Hanley Presbyterian), and Mr. R. Parker (Burslem, St. Paul's).

Commencing on the 11th ult., Mr. R. D'Oyly Carte's Opera Company fulfilled a six nights' engagement at the Theatre Royal, Hanley.

For the fourth annual Catholic Re-union at Hanley, Mr. Joseph Cantor's Opera Company supplied a popular programme.

Alderman Hyslop, of Newcastle, is actively engaged in promoting Concerts in the ancient Borough, and on the 14th ult. Miss Emilie Lloyd, Mr. W. H. Henley, and Mr. Bonner's Orchestra contributed to the programme. Unfortunately the hall was only half-filled.

Madame Albani appeared at Hanley on the 15th ult., with Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Norman Salmond, M. Wolff, M. Hollman, M. Pugno, and Mr. H. Lane Wilson as conductor.

The North Staffordshire Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap, performed "Elijah," at the Victoria Hall, on the 21st ult. The band and chorus numbered 350 performers, and Miss Beatrice Gough, Miss Marie Hooton, Mr. W. Molineaux, Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, Mr. F. Ward, and Mr. W. Sherratt were the principals.

MUSIC IN NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The most important musical event in this locality was the annual Concert of the Newcastle Constabulary, which took place on the 13th ult. The artists engaged were Madame Albani, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Andrew Black, Señor Sarasate, Madame Berthe Marx-Goldschmidt, and Signor Bisaccia. The Concert was eminently successful in every respect, the audience being one of the largest, if not absolutely the largest, that has ever assembled in the local Olympia on a similar occasion. The programme was of the usual miscellaneous character and calls for no special remark here.

On Saturday, the 16th ult., Madame Fanny Moody and Mr. Charles Manners and party gave a Recital of "Maritana" in Newcastle, before a popular audience.

On the 20th ult. Herr Rosenthal gave a Pianoforte Recital in Victoria Hall, Sunderland.

On the same date the sixty-sixth Concert of the Newcastle Chamber Music Society took place, in the Assembly Rooms, Newcastle-on-Tyne. The programme included Schumann's String Quartet in A (Op. 31, No. 3) and Mozart's Quartet in C (No. 6), also for strings. Both works were admirably played by Fräulein Wietrowetz, Mr. Louis Ries, Mr. Alfred Gibson, and Mr. Whitehouse. The vocalist was Mrs. Helen Trust, and Mr. J. M. Preston very ably discharged the duties of accompanist.

Dr. G. F. Huntley, organist of the Cathedral, Newcastle-on-Tyne, has been appointed organist and director of the choir at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, London.

The Chester-le-Street Choral Society is busy rehearsing Handel's "Judas Maccabæus."

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The sad death of Sir Charles Hallé only a day or two before the Recital of Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," announced by the Sacred Harmonic Society for October 31, threw a shadow over the Concert. The veteran conductor was replaced by Mr. A. Brodsky, the leader of the band, whose sound knowledge of the opera was of great value in such an emergency. The chorus had been thoroughly prepared by Mr. Adcock, and proved equal to the exacting demands of the music. The solos were entrusted to Madame Ella Russell, Miss Lilian Hovey, Mr. Leyland, Mr. Dunkerton, Mr. Dan Price, and Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. Andrew Black was never heard to better advantage here than on this occasion, and with Madame Russell and Mr. Dan Price did ample justice to the principal rôles. Together with Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra and such a chorus, as fine a performance was given as was possible without stage accessories, and the Nottingham musical public have reason to thank the Society for such an opportunity of enjoying this very difficult opera.

On the 5th ult. the Albert Hall was again crowded to excess on the occasion of Mr. Fould's miscellaneous Concert, when Madame Albani, Miss Clara Butt, Mr. Norman Salmond, M. Johannes Wolff, M. Hollman, and M. Raoul Pugno appeared. Additional interest was felt in the event, as it was to be the first appearance here of Miss Clara Butt. The Concert was unduly prolonged by encores, which eventually aroused protest.

A very worthy local organisation, the Amateur Orchestral Society, under the able direction of Mr. Ralph Horner, is again in full activity, rehearsing for its Concert to take place this month. The principal pieces in the programme are Raff's "Fest-Marsch," a Beethoven Symphony, the "Leonore" Overture, and an Overture by Smetana.

The Philharmonic Choir at last announces a series of Concerts with local talent, which at any rate gives us the satisfaction of knowing that this excellent Society intends to continue its efforts in the cultivation of unaccompanied choral singing.

Herr Ellenberger and Mr. Thorpe resume their Classical Concerts, and promise an interesting programme for the 28th ult., which we may report in our next.

MUSIC IN THE SOUTHERN COUNTIES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Salisbury Philharmonic Society made its appearance at the County Hall, Salisbury, on the 25th ult., when the programme was made up of a miscellaneous selection, including Gounod's "By Babylon's wave" and part-songs by Eaton Fanning. The vocalists announced were Miss Ada Potter and the Meister Glee Singers. The orchestra was led by Mr. E. Jones, who contributed a violin solo, and Mr. A. Foley conducted.

Miss Aylward and Mr. F. L. Bartlett announce their first Chamber Concert, which will take place at the Assembly Rooms this month. Mr. Watkin Mills will be the vocalist.

The Wilts Oratorio Society proposes to give performances during the season of selections from "The Messiah," Gounod's "Redemption," Spohr's "Last Judgment," and Schumann's "Advent Hymn." Conductor, Mr. E. Nunn.

The Marlborough Choral Society, conducted by Mr. W. S. Bambridge, is rehearsing Cowen's cantata "St. John's Eve" and Van Bree's "St. Cecilia's Day."

At Bournemouth, Señor Sarasate and Madame Marx-Goldschmidt gave a Recital in the Town Hall, on the 4th ult. Mr. Dan Godfrey, jun.'s, Symphony Concerts at the Pavilion are in full swing, and appear to be highly appreciated, as indeed they deserve to be.

A Choral Society has been established at Wimborne, with a membership of about 100. Gaul's cantata "Ruth" is being prepared for the first Concert.

The opening Concert of the Southampton Philharmonic Society took place at the Philharmonic Hall on the 26th ult. The programme included Sullivan's cantata "On shore and sea," and a miscellaneous second part. There was a full band and chorus, conducted by Mr. H. M. Pike.

The Winchester Choral Society, Conductor, Mr. C. Gamblin, is rehearsing the "Elijah"; and Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen" has been selected for the next Concert of the Hursley Choral Society.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS, after the excitement of the Festival week, may be said to reculer pour mieux sauter. Hence the only musical event of any importance to record is the Concert given by the Philharmonic Society on the 20th ult., which was distinguished not only by an excellent programme, but by the first public appearance of the Society's new conductor, Mr. Adolf Beyschlag. Stanford's "Revenge" and Parry's "Blest Pair of Sirens," with a couple of vocal solos and the "Hymn of Praise" as a makeweight, made up a programme of more than average interest, and the generally high level of the performance was a satisfactory indication of the conductor's suitability for his post. The soloists were Miss Medora Henson and Mr. Edward Lloyd. As a fitting tribute to the memory of their late conductor, Mr. Alfred Broughton, the Concert was preceded by Sullivan's "In Memoriam" Overture. At the first of Messrs. Haddock's Musical Evenings, on October 29, the chief incident in a programme of the miscellaneous character usual at these entertainments was the appearance of Mr. Foli and the Turkish pianist, Mr. Della Sudda. The second Concert took place on the 19th ult., when the Meister Glee Singers were the principal attraction, with Madame Duma as vocalist and Miss Pauline Sant-Angelo as pianist. The first of a practically new series of Subscription Concerts at Leeds, given by Mr. Whitelock, was on the 4th ult., when Mr. Gérardy's delightfully artistic violoncello playing gave a special interest to the occasion. The only Leeds Concerts remaining to be noticed are a Pianoforte Recital by Mr. de Greef and a Violin Recital by Miss Alice Simpkin, a local violinist, who showed commendable spirit in including the Brahms Concerto in her programme.

Bradford was visited by Dr. Richter and his orchestra on the 1st ult., the programme consisting of Tschaiowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony and a series of Wagner pieces. The only criticism that need be made upon the Concert is that Dr. Richter's masterly conducting was a revelation to the West Riding, while the fact that Bradford was one of the last provincial towns visited by him resulted in performances of quite unusual finish—even for Richter. Mr. Edward Lloyd was the singer. On October 25 the Subscription Concerts began. The death that morning of Sir Charles Hallé, the founder and conductor of these Concerts, cast a shadow over the evening, and, had there been time, the Concert would have been postponed. As it was, the bâton was taken by Mr. Brodsky, the new leader of the Manchester band, and a moderately interesting programme of orchestral classics was gone through, with more success than might have been expected under the circumstances. The violin playing of Mr. Sarasate, who was in exceptionally good form, was the most sensational thing of the Concert. Vocal solos were contributed by Madame Alice Esty. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave its second Concert on the 2nd ult. Mr. Arbos played Max Bruch's G minor Concerto, and the recently appointed conductor of the Society, Mr. A. E. Bartle, directed very creditable performances of Mozart's E flat Symphony, Mr. German's "Gipsy Suite," and other orchestral works. On the 8th ult. the Bradford Choral Society, under Mr. Garland's conductorship, gave "Judas Maccabæus," with Miss Emily Davies, Mrs. Dowson, Mrs. Ashcroft Clarke, Messrs. Iver McKay and Bantock Pierpoint as principals. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra supplied a very efficient band. On October 21 the Bradford Harmony Society—a newly established institution for performances of chamber music—gave its first Concert.

At Huddersfield the Choral Society opened its season, on October 25, with Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" and Spohr's "God, Thou art great," with Madame Bertha Moore, Miss Sykes, Messrs. McKay and Pierpoint as principals; and Mr. J. Bowling as conductor. If the performances were hardly up to the usual standard, this is less the fault of the chorus, which in power and vigour is second to none in the country; but is rather owing to the exceptional demands made upon the band, undoubtedly the Society's weakest point. Since last writing there have been two Subscription Concerts, on the 5th and 10th ult. At the former, the clever singing of the Meister Glee Singers was the chief attraction; Madame Alice Gomez, Miss Mary Harris, with Mr. John Saunders and Madame Hast as instrumentalists, completing the party. The other Concert was in the nature of a Pianoforte Recital by Mr. Rosenthal, varied with songs by Madame Albani and violin solos by Mr. Johannes Wolff. Of Mr. Rosenthal, who made on this occasion his first appearance in Yorkshire, we shall have a better opportunity of speaking next month, when he will have played in other Yorkshire towns.

Halifax has for some years past been without any Subscription Chamber Concerts, but now Mr. R. F. Webster, a local musician, has begun a series that promises well. On October 23, Miss Fanny Davies, Messrs. Arbos and Whitehouse played Brahms's Trio in C minor (Op. 101) and Mendelssohn's Trio in the same key in thoroughly artistic style, and Mr. Bispham proved exactly the right type of vocalist for the occasion by his finely sympathetic singing of Löwe's "Archibald Douglas." Mr. Bispham's singing was also one of the most satisfactory features in the Concert given by the Halifax Choral Society, on the 15th ult. Gade's "Psyche," a selection from "Tannhäuser," and Bach's "I wrestle and pray" were the principal things in a very attractive programme. Sir Charles Hallé's band did full justice to the orchestral part of the work, and Miss Emily Davies, Miss Sharp, Mrs. Strange, and Mr. Fleming were the principal vocalists. The conductors were Dr. J. C. Bridge and Mr. W. H. Garland.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE season of 1895-6 is now fairly inaugurated. With the performances of grand opera, which will begin in New York before this letter reaches London, everything will be in full swing, and already the first events of the concert-room justify the prediction made some months ago of an exceptionally brilliant period in the musical history of New York.

To be chronologically exact as to past happenings, one must begin with the first Concert of the Manuscript Society, which was given in Chickering Hall on the evening of October 24. The programme contained an overture, "The Crusaders," by Max Muhliert, of Brooklyn; "Columbus," a tone-poem, by E. C. Phelps, of Brooklyn; "Sappho's Prayer to Aphrodite," an aria, by Margaret E. Lang, of Boston; a Symphonic Suite illustrative of Shakespeare's "Tempest," by S. G. Pratt, of New York; two songs, by Helen Hood, of Boston; and a Ballet Suite, by Henry K. Hadley, of Garden City, Long Island. Mr. Adolph Neuendorff conducted the orchestra. At the three public Concerts which are to follow, selections from Xaver Scharwenka's opera "Mataswintha" (which is to be staged in Vienna in December) and from Bruno O. Klein's opera "Kenilworth" will be heard; also possibly a composition upon which Dudley Buck is now said to be engaged. The six private meetings of the Society will be held in the hall of the Mendelssohn Glee Club (a beautiful concert-room), and at these the social features which the Club has recently taken upon itself will be manifested to the extent of a reception to some noted artist or composer. Receptions to Madame Patti, to Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, and to Madame Nordica have already been arranged. The new club house, at No. 17, East Twenty-second Street, has been tastefully fitted up, and is already proving a convenient and pleasant resort for the members of the Society and their friends.

Following hard upon the Manuscript Club's Concert came a brilliant one given at Carnegie Hall by Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler, one of the very foremost of American pianoforte players, who recently returned to her Chicago home after a long European sojourn, and who has now set out on an extensive professional tour. Mrs. Zeisler had the assistance of Mr. Damrosch's orchestra, and played the Schumann Concerto, the Rubinstein Concerto in D minor, and the Scherzo from Litolft's D minor Concerto (which last had not been often heard here since it was a sort of pièce de résistance with Mr. Rafael Joseffy years ago), besides the Liszt "Erl-König" transcription. The performance of such a programme was a trying feat of endurance, but Mrs. Zeisler's gifts in that direction seem equal to any demand, and she carried her hearers with her through thick and thin by sheer virtuosity and fiery energy, albeit there were those among her almost entirely professional audience who found cause to dissent from some of the peculiarities of her style.

The next notable event was the first Concert of the Symphony Society (afternoon and evening of the 1st and 2nd ult.), at which the bright particular star was Mr. Marsick. The instrumental selections were Tschaiowsky's C minor Concerto for violin and the Prelude to the second act of Richard Strauss's "Guntram." This Concert was also marked by the re-appearance, after an absence of several years, of Mrs. Clementine de Vere Sapiro, always a brilliant and showy, and therefore popular vocalist.

Next after Mr. Marsick came Mr. Paderewski, whose opening Concert took place at Carnegie Hall on the evening of the 4th ult. There is, of course, little to say about a Paderewski Concert, which, as an artistic triumph, is always a foregone conclusion. The reception given to the performer showed that his hold upon the American concert-goer is just as strong as it ever was. The Polish Fantasia, which was played for the first time here, exhibited the Concert-giver in a new light; but as it was heard in London at least two years ago there is nothing to be said of it which would not be verging upon the region of ancient history, except that it was most cordially welcomed and is likely to cause as much of an impression here as it has elsewhere.

After this came the first Concert of the Seidl Society of Brooklyn, on the 11th ult., at which Mr. Paderewski again appeared, playing the F minor Concerto of Chopin, his Polish Fantasia, and the Liszt E flat Concerto.

The German Opera Company, which is to sing under the direction of Mr. Walter Damrosch, left New York on the 9th ult. for Cincinnati, where its season opened. The orchestra preceded them by two or three days, stopping en route at Pittsburgh to take part in the dedication of the new public library and music hall, which have been presented to that city by Mr. Andrew Carnegie.

The rumour that the Church Choral Society will not sing this season has received recent confirmation, and this, if true, will leave the field in New York for choruses of moderate size open to the Musical Art Society (under Mr. Frank Damrosch), the New York Musical Society (under Mr. Dossert), and the new Harlem Oratorio Society. The second of these organisations will give its first Concert on November 30, when Saint-Saëns's "The Deluge," and a new work, "The Lily Nymph," by Mr. G. W. Chadwick, of Boston, will be sung. Mrs. Bloomfield-Zeiser will be the soloist.

In the department of church music there is little new in New York. On the evening of Sunday, the 3rd ult., a special Service was held in St. George's Church, Stuyvesant Square, in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. George William Warren as organist of St. Thomas's Church. Four choirs—those of Trinity, St. Thomas's, St. George's, and St. Bartholomew's—took part, the total number of voices being somewhere about 200. The Bishop of New York delivered the address, and after the service presented Mr. Warren with a handsome silver loving-cup, the gift of the organists of New York. The union of the churches of St. James and Holy Trinity has resulted in the retaining of the best voices in each of the respective choirs, giving a picked chorus of twenty-eight boys and twenty men, including a double solo quartet. This choir, with a very liberal appropriation, will undoubtedly be henceforth the leading "up-town" choir of the city.

The Beethoven String Quartet, which has only one rival in this country (the Kneisel Quartet, of Boston) has lost its second violin, Mr. Thiele. His place has been filled by Mr. Joseph Kovarik, and the club will hereafter be known as the Dannreuther Quartet, taking its name from that of the first violin, Mr. Gustav Dannreuther. This club announces three Concerts, at the first of which Mr. Arthur Whiting, who has come to New York from Boston to live, will be the soloist.

The prospects of the new School of Music at Yale College are more encouraging than ever. The resident orchestra is preparing a series of programmes, to be given under the direction of Mr. Parker. There will also be six Chamber Concerts, at five of which the Kneisel Quartet will play. A series of Lectures on worship music will be delivered before the Divinity School. These will be illustrated by various choirs and organists. Next year the College of New Jersey (located at Princeton, N.J., which is the third college in the country in point of size, wealth, and academic influence) will complete its 150th year of corporate existence. A movement is now on foot to provide the necessary endowments for the different professional schools, which will make Princeton a University in fact as well as in name. The founding of a school of music forms a part of this scheme, and, as a preliminary, a series of Symphony Concerts has been arranged to be given during the coming winter, the proceeds of which will go to swell the endowment fund of the school of music. The conducting of these Concerts has been placed in the hands of Mr. Alfred S. Baker, organist of St. James's Church, New York, who is not only a Princeton alumnus, but is a native of that town itself, being the son of the rector of the Parish Church there. Mr. Baker has lately been studying with Mr. Dvorák and has produced some creditable work in church music.

In Chicago the most important musical occurrence, so far, has been the appearance of Madame Melba with her concert company. The famous soprano will complete quite a long Western tour before joining the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York.

In Philadelphia the Orchestral Concerts, conducted by Mr. Gustav Hinrichs, will be continued, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take advantage of its trips to New York to run on to Philadelphia for a series of afternoon performances. These, with the possibility of still another set to be given under a local conductor, make it possible that the Quaker City may suffer from an embarrassment of musical riches. There should be room in Philadelphia for plenty of performances of the first class, but that city is astonishingly slow in musical matters. Even in church music, though there are many large and wealthy congregations, there is not a single choir which can be set down as belonging to the first rank.

MUSIC IN PARIS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

REHEARSALS of Guiraud's "Frédégonde" are now being actively carried on at the Opéra. Mdlle. Ganne made a favourable début in the part of Hilda in "Sigurd," on October 30. On the 7th ult., at the Opéra Comique, a revival of "Galathée," for the début of Mdlle. Marignan (whose recent successes at the Conservatoire have already been noticed), took place. The young artist is an excellent recruit to this theatre. Mr. Carvalho has just received a lyrical legend, entitled "Hedda," in three acts, by M. le Borne. We have already referred to the different works that are mounted at this theatre, and shall therefore wait until the first performances have been given before devoting more attention to it. Madame Calvé has been succeeded by Madame de Nuovina in "La Navarraise"; needless to say she has proved entirely successful.

At M. Lamoureux's Concert, which took place on October 27, we must not omit to mention a fine rendering of M. Balakieff's "Thámar," which the public seemed to find somewhat lengthy, notwithstanding its distinctly Slavonic flavour. "L'hymne à Victor Hugo," by Saint-Saëns, was not favourably received; but at the Concert which was held on the 3rd ult. the composer had his reward, when his Symphony in C minor (with organ and pianoforte accompaniment) was performed. This work having already been played in London, there is no need for us to praise it here; we will merely remark that the great breadth of style of this composition, together with the admirable orchestration, made a profound impression on the public, and that it met with great success. Apart from the piece itself, the performance left nothing to be desired, and M. Lamoureux must have congratulated himself on the presence of the organ, which was heard for the first time. In consequence of this success, three consecutive performances of this Symphony had necessarily to be given.

At M. Colonne's Concerts the first appearance of any novelties are looked for with much interest. At the Concert which was given on October 27, three "Vaux-de-Vire," by M. Gédalge, were performed. These short pieces, written to ancient Norman poetry, were sung with good effect by M. Gaudubert, and scored a success; the "Mois de Mai" in particular, which is daintily written, being encored. M. Gédalge is a musician of distinction, who conducts M. Massenet's class at the Conservatoire, when the French master absents himself for rehearsals of his works abroad. M. Widor wrote incidental music sometime since for the "Conte d'Avril," by M. Dorchain. From this he has made a very pleasing "Suite d'orchestre," which was well received by the public. The Concert, which took place on the 3rd ult., acquired an exceptional importance from the fact that M. Saint-Saëns was present. The second act of his "Proserpine" was performed under his direction. This work enjoyed a great success during its brief run at the Opéra Comique eight years ago; it is full of charm, and it gained for its composer a splendid ovation. As a result, three more performances of this second act of "Proserpine" have had to be given.

At length we were enabled to hear, on the 17th ult., the first of the great Concerts which were announced long ago to be given at the Opéra. Portions of Gluck's "Alceste," superbly sung by Madame Caron, met with the chief success, and the "Danses anciennes" were equally well received. We must refer to a part of M. V. d'Indy's opera "Fervaa" (heard for the first time), at which he has been working for some years, and which is to be produced shortly at Brussels. It is Wagnerian in style and powerfully effective. The part heard, however, can only be viewed in its true light by what precedes and what follows it; therefore the press has reserved its criticism until the first performance of the entire opera, but at the same time speaks favourably of the splendid technical qualities displayed by M. V. d'Indy. MM. Vidal and Marty, who directed, were very much applauded.

At M. Harcourt's Concert, held on the 3rd ult., we must mention a Symphony by M. Raband (a recent winner of the "Prix de Rome"), which was heard for the first time. This work displays serious study and a real knowledge of classical style, but one cannot yet predict what the composer's future will be.

THE annual School Board Choral Competition for the challenge medallion took place on the 13th ult., in Queen's Hall. The judges were Sir John Stainer and Mr. W. G. McNaught, and each of the choirs contesting had, as usual, to sing a test piece (Webbe's "When winds breathe soft"), a sight test ("A May Day Song" specially composed by Mr. W. Roston Bourke), and a piece of its own selection. The adjudications were made, it was stated, on the following points: correctness in time and tune, expression, quality of tone, pronunciation of words, and preservation of pitch. The prize went to the same school as last year, Lyndhurst Grove, Camberwell (conductor, Mr. A. Everett), the announcement being received with cheers. Second honours were taken by the Fleet Road, Hampstead, choir, conducted by Mr. J. Harris. The other schools competing were Malmesbury Road, Bow (conductor, Mr. H. F. E. Dawson), Gillespie Road, Highbury Vale (Mr. H. Smith), Buckingham Terrace, North Kensington (Mr. R. McIvor), and Ancona Road, Plumstead (Mr. T. H. Griffiths). The united choirs subsequently sang a three-part voluntary from manual signs, wrote a three-part exercise and sang it, and gave sight tests. Lady Gorst presented the prizes, and in acknowledging a vote of thanks Sir John Stainer said he and his friend, Mr. McNaught, were very glad to agree on the question of the improvement manifest in the singing year by year.

It is doubtful if the revival of any comic opera has ever received a more hearty welcome than that which was accorded to Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Mikado," which, originally produced in 1885, was remounted at the Savoy Theatre on the 6th ult. No little of this success is due to the vivacity and humorosity of the music, which seems as fresh and inspiring to-day as when first heard. Song after song was repeated at the insistence of an audience which apparently would fain have had the whole work performed twice over. Three members of the original cast take part in the present production, Miss Jessie Bond as Pitti Sing, Miss Rosina Brandram as Katisha, and Mr. Rutland Barrington as Pooh-Bah. The fascinations of Yum-Yum are delightfully expressed by Miss Florence Perry, and Miss Emmie Owen completes the trio "filled to the brim with girlish glee." Ko-Ko finds an excellent exponent in Mr. Walter Passmore, the impersonations of Mr. Scott Fiske as The Mikado and Mr. Charles Kenningham as Nanki Poo being equally commendable. Under the conductorship of the composer the orchestra and chorus worked with zeal and enthusiasm, and the latter must have felt that there was good reason for their singing at the conclusion—

Inaugurate our new career.

THE Queen's Hall Choir started its third season on the 13th ult., with highly commendable performances of Mendelssohn's "Athalie" music and "Walpurgis Night," divided by Beethoven's "Choral Fantasia." The choir has been re-organised by Mr. Randegger, the present Conductor, who may be congratulated on having got together an evenly balanced force that is both zealous and competent. The attack was firm throughout, and more than ordinary attention was paid to details of expression. The choral portions of Mendelssohn's two works were sung with vigour, tempered by discretion. Indeed, the bold and picturesque passages of the "Walpurgis Night" have rarely of late years been delivered with so much breadth. With the fine band led by Mr. Frye Parker no fault could be found. The solo vocalists were Miss Thudichum, Miss Emily Squire, and Madame Marian McKenzie; Messrs. Iver McKay, F. G. Ranaflow, and W. Ludwig. Miss Sybil Palliser played the pianoforte part of the "Choral Fantasia" in a brilliant manner, and the spoken text of "Athalie" was entrusted to Mr. Richard Temple.

THE Musical Guild commenced its thirteenth season of Chamber Concerts at the Kensington Town Hall, on October 29, with a programme, so far as its instrumental features were concerned, drawn from Beethoven, Bach, and Dvořák. The last-named was represented by the String Quartet in E flat (Op. 51), whilst of the Bonn master there was the String Quartet in E flat (Op. 74), both works being ably interpreted by Messrs. Arthur Bent, Wallace Sutcliffe, Alfred Hobday, and Paul Ludwig. Between these compositions came Bach's double Concerto for two violins in D minor, rendered with neatness and judgment by Miss Isabella Donkersley and Miss Winifred Holiday. Mrs. Helen Trust sang charmingly Arne's ballad "My lovely Phillis" and an air by Giordani. A specially interesting feature of the second Concert (12th ult.) was Dr. Hubert Parry's vigorous String Quintet in E flat, played by Messrs. Bent, Sutcliffe, Hobday, Kearne, and Werge, and exceedingly well received. Miss Ethel Sharpe was deservedly complimented on her performance of Chopin's Pianoforte Sonata in B flat minor (Op. 35).

ON the 7th ult. the fifth annual Choir Festival of the Highgate Rural Deanery Church Choir Association was held in Hornsey Parish Church in the presence of a large congregation. The combined choirs numbered 200 voices, and came from Christ Church, North Finchley; Christ Church, Crouch End; St. Barnabas's, Woodside Park; St. John's, Whetstone; St. James's, Muswell Hill; and Hornsey Parish Church. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Garrett in D, and Tallis's setting to the Responses was used. Special Psalms and hymns were sung, also processional hymns by Barby and Docker at the opening and close of the service. The anthem was Gounod's "Sing praises unto the Lord," the quartet being taken by Masters Wroast and Watson, Messrs. Brooks, Gaze, and Nicholls. The choir was conducted by Mr. George Dixon, choirmaster of Christ Church, North Finchley, and Mr. H. J. Baker, organist of Hornsey Parish Church, presided at the organ, and also played a good selection of music before and after the service.

THE MESSRS. HANN, who for nine seasons have given the highest-class chamber compositions, on the 4th ult. began another series at Brixton Hall, with no sign of diminution of public support. The more important works were Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18) and Schumann's Trio in D minor (Op. 63), each played with a precision and unity of effect not obtainable save from artists long associated together. Better ensemble playing could scarcely be hoped for. Mr. Clement Hann distinguished himself by a spirited execution of Boccherini's Violoncello Sonata in A major, and Madame Clara Samuelli's vocalisation was thoroughly appreciated. On the 18th ult. the programme included Saint-Saëns's Quartet in B flat (Op. 41) and Mozart's Quintet in D (No. 7), given in a very satisfactory manner. Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat for violoncello and pianoforte received justice from Messrs. Sidney and W. C. Hann. Miss Greta Williams successfully sang Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh'!" and Leo Stern's "Oh, for a day of Spring."

AN interesting manuscript—viz., the original version of the libretto of "Lohengrin"—was to be brought under the hammer last month by the firm of Liepmannsohn, in Berlin. Although in the handwriting of another person, the title-page, together with a great number of alterations and addenda, are undoubtedly in that of Wagner himself. The manuscript differs materially from the accepted version, containing as it does some 160 lines omitted in the latter, which, on the other hand, contains about sixty that are not to be found in the present draft copy. Amongst the portions subsequently deleted by Wagner are a detailed account offered by Ortrud of the circumstances of the young prince's transformation into a swan and the singing on the part of the latter of six lines previous to his resumption of the human shape. There always had been a suspicion of the famous swan being originally intended to be vocal and articulate, a surmise which has now received its confirmation.

AN interesting ceremony took place, on the 13th ult., in the Galleries of the Royal Society of British Artists, when Sir John Stainer made a presentation to Mr. W. G. McNaught, Her Majesty's Assistant-Inspector of Music. The presentation took the form of Mr. McNaught's portrait painted by Mr. J. Doyle Penrose. Sir John Stainer, in asking Mr. McNaught to accept the picture, said there were very few people who knew more about Mr. McNaught than he did. Everybody must recognise that he was a man who had done an immense amount of good for music, especially towards popularising it; that in the highest and best sense he had tried to make music one of the great means of education to the masses of this country. Any little public recognition that could be made to such a man was well deserved. Mr. J. W. Benn and Mr. Spencer Curwen having also spoken, Mr. McNaught suitably acknowledged the gift.

At the Guildhall a number of students of the School bearing its name were, on October 26, presented with prizes and certificates by Alderman Sir Henry Knight. In a preliminary Concert, Miss Sara Sole, Miss Edith Leslie, Mr. B. Griffiths-Percy, and Mr. John Johnson sang tastefully, and Miss Jeanne Levine (gold medalist), Miss Muriel Handley, and Miss Julia Alice Tabb exhibited marked ability in violin, violoncello, and pianoforte solos respectively. In the course of a brief address Sir Joseph Barnby laid stress on the fact that instruction was given not only to what he called "professional students," but to amateurs who loved music, and thus the school was educating both performers and audiences of the future. He also mentioned that Dr. Richter had visited the school and expressed great approval of the performances of the pupils.

Two attractive Chamber Concerts were given on the 7th and 20th ult. respectively, by the Bernhard Carrodus String Quartet, at the small Queen's Hall. The instrumentalists consist of Messrs. B. M. Carrodus, R. Carrodus, W. Richardson, and J. F. Carrodus, who are led with marked ability by the first-named, and who play with admirable unanimity. The programme of the second Concert included a new MS. Sonata for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. F. Kilvington Hattersley, by whom and Mr. R. Carrodus it was performed. Of the four movements, the most pleasing is the second, which is less affected by endeavours to reproduce the style of Grieg. The same evening an excellent interpretation was given of Brahms's fascinating "Gipsy Songs" (Op. 103), by Miss P. Allen, Miss G. Wilson, Mr. W. Green, and Mr. E. Iles.

THE London Academy of Music made a demonstration on the 15th ult., when the presentation at St. George's Hall of diplomas and medals to candidates successful in the July examinations was prefaced by a couple of instrumental pieces and a scene each from "Der Freischütz" and "Il Trovatore." Under the bâton of Mr. A. Pollitzer praiseworthy performances were given of the Overtures to Weber's above-mentioned opera and to Auber's "Le Domino Noir," and the accompaniments to the vocal pieces were crisply played. In the first scene of the second act of "Der Freischütz," sustained by students of the dramatic class, directed by Madame Heritte-Viardot, Miss Edith Serpell (as Anne) manifested marked capacity for the work she had undertaken.

MR. HEDMOND'S brief but ambitious season of opera in English, at Covent Garden Theatre, ended on the 9th ult., the final additions to the repertory being those effective but lurid little works "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci." These were on the whole very effectively given, though of course details, now that the enterprise is at an end, would be superfluous. Enough that Mr. Hedmond has demonstrated that some of the most advanced music-dramas of Richard Wagner can be efficiently interpreted by English speaking artists, and it is pleasing to learn that he is sufficiently satisfied with the measure of popular favour he has obtained to induce him to start a fresh season at the earliest opportunity.

MISS EILEEN MUNRO and Mr. Patrick Munro gave a Dramatic and Musical Recital on the 21st ult., at the Queen's (Small) Hall. The lady has much versatility, and was heard at her best in comedy, especially in Mr. Louis N. Parker's clever little duologue "Reply Paid," in which she was ably assisted by Mr. Acton Bond. Mr. Patrick Munro also recited several pieces, and was most successful in the quarrel between Sir Anthony and Captain Absolute, from the "Rivals." Songs were contributed by Miss Florence Munro (pupil of Mr. Visetti), Mr. Gabriel Thorpe, and Mr. Tom Thomas, the last-named gentleman being the possessor of a very fine and powerful voice.

MR. BEN DAVIES, who was touring last month in Germany and Austria, has been greatly appreciated there. Both at Berlin and at Frankfort-on-Main he won golden opinions, and at Vienna, where he gave two Concerts, his reception was of the warmest. Says the Neue Musikalische Presse, inter alia: "Mr. Davies is the possessor of a splendid tenor voice of a baritone-like timbre, and so marvellously trained that the listener scarcely knows where to begin with his admiration and where to stop. In every one of his songs he proves the fact that the most tender lyrical feeling may well be combined with a strongly marked vigour."

AN exceptionally large audience attended the Organ Recital given by Miss Edroff, at the Bow and Bromley Institute, on the 9th ult. The young artist is a pupil of Mr. Henry Clark at the London Organ School, and has been recently playing at St. George's Hall, Liverpool, and elsewhere with success. A very attractive programme was presented, and Miss Edroff was warmly applauded, especially after the Toccata from Widor's Fifth Symphony and Scotson Clark's "Chorus of Angels," which she had to repeat. The vocalists were Madame Belle Cole and Mr. Alexander Tucker, and the accompanist, as usual, Mr. Fountain Meen.

MR. W. COENEN, whose services as teacher have recently been acquired by the Guildhall School of Music, gave a Pianoforte Recital, on the 15th ult., in the Concert-room of the Institution. Mr. Coenen's great abilities were advantageously shown in Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, in Beethoven's familiar Sonata in F minor (Op. 57), and an attractive selection of pieces by Liszt and Grieg. Much and well merited applause was also elicited by a graceful Nocturne, and by a brilliant Fantasia for the left hand only, by the reciter. Some songs expressively sung by Miss Florence Oliver provided pleasurable variety.

THE orchestral performances at the Imperial Institute were resumed in the Concert Hall, on the 20th ult., under the direction of Mr. Alberto Randegger, who now has under his command a band of over a hundred amateur instrumentalists. Auber's vivacious Overture to "Le Domino Noir," the Entr'acte to the second act of "Carmen," and other pieces were rendered with praiseworthy spirit, and the Misses Suto's performances on two pianofortes were distinguished by admirable unanimity and finish. Mrs. Katharine Fisk's fine voice and expressive singing also gave manifest pleasure to a large audience.

GLUCK'S "Orpheus" has been given on the concert platform many times, but probably never with greater effect than was secured by the admirable Highbury Philharmonic Society, under Mr. G. H. Betjemann, at the Highbury Athenaeum, on Monday, the 18th ult. The Sisters Ravogli were engaged, and Miss Giulia Ravogli has never sung "Che farò" with more pathos even on the stage. Subsequently a very fine performance was given of Professor Stanford's "Revenge," the rich, sonorous voices of the North London choristers telling out splendidly. Highbury should be proud of its Philharmonic Society.

MR. ALFRED J. DYE gave his annual Concert at the Woodside Hall, North Finchley, on the 8th ult., when he was assisted by Madame Clara Samuelli, Miss Emily Foxcroft, Mr. Reginald Groome, Mr. James Blackney, Mr. Edmund Woolhouse (violoncello), Mr. Walter M. George (musical sketches), and Dr. Charles W. Pearce. Mr. Dye produced three new songs, sung respectively by Madame Clara Samuelli, Miss Emily Foxcroft, and Mr. Reginald Groome, which were well received. Mr. Dye also contributed some pianoforte solos by Henselt and Chopin, and took part in a Pianoforte Trio by Dr. Pearce.

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It features a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a common time signature (C). The score is divided into three systems. The first system contains the first two lines of the vocal melody and the piano accompaniment. The second system contains the next two lines of the vocal melody and the piano accompaniment. The third system contains the final two lines of the vocal melody and the piano accompaniment. The piano accompaniment consists of a right-hand part and a left-hand part. The right-hand part often features arpeggiated chords and moving lines, while the left-hand part provides a harmonic foundation with chords and moving lines. The vocal melody is written in a single staff, with lyrics placed below the notes. The lyrics are: "all man - kind. To you in Da - vid's and all man - kind. and all man - kind. and all man - kind. town this day Is born of Da - vid's line A Sa - viour, a Sa - viour, who is Christ.. the". The score includes dynamic markings such as p (piano) and con espress. (con espressione). There is also a fermata over a measure in the piano accompaniment in the second system.

to ten shillings toward the support of this charity. It is known to but few musicians and amateurs, and through the consequent smallness of the subscription list its existence is seriously threatened. Miss Kenway's admirable Institution has frequently received notice in these columns, and we trust that our readers will respond to Mrs. Henschel's special appeal with the cordiality it deserves.

MR. MACDONALD SMITH's system for the rapid acquisition of touch and technique, which has already created considerable interest among pianists under the title "From Brain to Keyboard," is now being submitted to a rigorous test at the Royal Academy of Music, with ten specially selected pupils, under the supervision of the Principal, Sir Alexander Mackenzie. This thorough and practical trial should amply test whether or no the method is really of the "Epoch-making" nature the inventor claims it to be.

COLONEL FARQUHAR GLENNIE, commandant of the Royal Military School of Music, is making an appeal on behalf of the widow of Lieutenant Griffiths, the late Director of Music at the Royal Military School of Music. She is left with four children quite unprovided for, except by their pension, which cannot amount to more than £70 a year, and it is hoped that those who appreciate military band music will contribute towards a memorial to a most deserving officer.

THE pitch of the Queen's Hall organ has now been lowered to the diapason normal, and we understand that the following societies have also decided to adopt the same pitch: the Philharmonic Society, the Mottl Orchestra, the Nikisch Orchestra, the Queen's Hall Sunday Orchestra, the Stock Exchange Orchestra, the Strolling Players' Orchestra, the London Symphony Orchestra, the Scottish Orchestra, the Bach Choir, the Queen's Hall Choir, and the National Sunday League.

THE first Concert of the twenty-eighth season of the South London Choral Association took place on the 27th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and A. D. Arnott's "Ballad of Carmilhan" were performed. The vocalists were Miss Emily Davies, Miss Edith Dove, Mr. Charles Ellison, and Mr. Charles Magrath. Mr. T. E. Gatehouse was, as usual, leader of the band, and Mr. Leonard C. Venables conducted.

A SYNDICATE has purchased the site of Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket. A new Opera House is to be erected on a part of the site from plans prepared by Mr. Walter Emden, and the remainder of the ground is to be utilised for shops, club chambers, a restaurant, and an arcade. The building operations are to be pushed forward so soon as the Crown and County Council authorities have been satisfied.

A SPECIAL musical Service was held at All Saints', Margaret Street, on St. Cecilia's Eve, the 21st ult., when a very fine rendering of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was given. The solos were taken by Masters Rowlands, Barker, and Mr. Edwin Bryant. The choir was augmented for the occasion, and a band was in attendance. Mr. W. S. Hoyte presided at the organ, and afterwards gave an Organ Recital.

HERR EMIL SAUER played before Her Majesty the Queen Regent of Spain and Royal Family during his stay in Madrid. He also played various pianoforte duets with the Infanta Isabella, sister of the late King Alfonso. The Queen personally expressed to him her appreciation of his talents, and invested him with the distinction of the Commander's Cross of "Isabella la Catolica."

THE annual Festival Service of the Church Choirs' Union for the Rural Deanery of Spitalfields took place on the 19th ult., at St. John's Church, Bethnal Green. Twelve choirs took part, and the music included an Evening Service in C major, by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, and Purcell's anthem "Sing unto the Lord." Mr. F. J. Yeatman conducted, and Mr. A. F. Grainger acted as organist.

ON the 19th ult. an Organ Recital was given by Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, at All Saints' Church, North Pectham. The programme included pieces by Dubois, Guilman, Schumann, Chauvet, Grison, and Saint-Saëns. Mr. F. G. Harlow was the vocalist.

AT St. Simon's, Chelsea, on October 28 (Patronal Festival), several solos were sung from "St. Paul," "The Messiah," and "Elijah," by Mr. Charles Ray (alto), Mr. T. Bertram Thomson (tenor), and Mr. R. Fitzgerald (bass). Mr. G. Hardcastle was at the organ, which was supplemented by a small orchestra, and Mr. Thomas Curry, the organist and choirmaster, conducted.

THE Stock Exchange Orchestral Society will give three Subscription Concerts at the Queen's Hall on the 3rd inst., and on February 18 and April 21, 1896. Among the works announced to be performed for the first time are, Suite for orchestra, R. H. Walthew; Overture, "Othello," W. Macfarren; and Concert-Overture, Miss Clarisse Mallard.

THE Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance, on the 5th ult., of "Samson," at St. Mary's, Hoxton. Soloists: Miss Cecilia Gray, Miss Alice Macfarlane, Mr. John Probert, Mr. Arthur Appleby, and Mr. James Blackney. Dr. E. H. Turpin accompanied on the organ.

MR. FREDERICK WILLIAMS has been appointed Conductor of the Temperance Choral Society in place of the late Mr. J. A. Birch. The first Concert under his direction will be given at St. Martin's Town Hall on the 16th inst., when Gounod's "Gallia" will be the chief piece in the programme.

THE annual Banquet of the Guild of Church Musicians was held at the Holborn Restaurant on the 18th ult., when the Very Rev. the Dean of Bristol, President of the Guild, took the chair.

A SELECTION from Gounod's "Mors et Vita" will be sung in St. Marylebone Parish Church, on Wednesdays, the 4th, 11th, and 18th inst., at 8 p.m.

MR. C. F. REDDIE has been appointed a Professor of the Pianoforte at the Royal Academy of Music.

OBITUARY.

WE have to record the death, on the 8th ult., in London, of Mr. CARL OBERTHÜR, the distinguished harpist. Born on March 4, 1819, at Munich, where his father was a manufacturer of harp and pianoforte strings, he became a pupil of Roeder, and in 1837 was engaged by Charlotte Birch-Pfeiffer, the dramatic authoress and theatrical directrice, as harpist at the Zurich Theatre. In this position he remained two years, and after occupying similar posts at the theatres of Wiesbaden and Mannheim, Oberthür, in 1844, at the instance of Moscheles, came to London, with the musical life of which he has been permanently associated ever since. A member for a brief period of the orchestra of Her Majesty's Theatre, under Sir Michael Costa, his subsequent career became more and more exclusively that of an eminently successful teacher and Concert-giver, both in this country and on the Continent, his fame as a harpist being indeed of European extent. He was the composer of an opera, "Floris von Namur" (brought out with some success at Wiesbaden), of a Mass, several cantatas, a symphonic legend, "Loreley," and other orchestral and pianoforte pieces, and of a vast number of original compositions and arrangements for his own instrument. The deceased artist, who was in his seventy-seventh year, died suddenly, while at a private Concert, of failure of the heart.

Lieutenant SAMUEL CHARLES GRIFFITHS, the Director of the Royal Military School of Music at Kneller Hall, expired suddenly, while out walking in the vicinity of the hall, on the afternoon of October 31. Born in 1847, the son of a colour-sergeant in the Royal Scots Regiment, he made his way from the humble beginning of a band boy to the mastership of his band at the age of twenty-one. In that position he continued till 1889, when his reputation as a musician and instructor recommended him to the appointment of bandmaster at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He had not been there more than nine months when the highest professional prize offered to military musicians became open to him by the death of Mr. Charles Cousins. This appointment, after a severe competition, fell to Mr. Griffiths. His thorough mastery of his work, both practical and theoretical, combined with a zealous devotion to his duties, gave the office he occupied great popularity and prestige.

The death is announced in Australian papers, on September 26, at Picton, of Mr. NEVILLE GEORGE BARNETT, a distinguished organist, composer, and theoretical author. He was born in London on March 3, 1854, and studied music under Mr. R. Limpus, and Drs. Hopkins and Turpin. When only nineteen years of age he was so far advanced as to pass, simultaneously, the Associates' and Fellowship examinations at the Royal College of Organists. He subsequently went to New Zealand, and was appointed organist of St. Luke's Anglican Church, a position which, a few years later, he exchanged for a similar one at St. Matthew's Church, Auckland. In 1889 Mr. Barnett took up his residence in Sydney as organist of St. Mary's (R.C.) Cathedral, musical director at the Synagogue, and instructor at the Blind Institution, from which posts he only recently retired on account of ill-health. As an organ performer, the deceased deservedly took high rank, while he also distinguished himself by the composition of an opera, "Pomare," founded upon a Tahitian legend, and privately performed at Auckland; of a fine Mass, and of numerous part-songs and ballads. He was the author of some treatises on the art, the last of them, entitled "The Art-Theory of Harmony" (as yet unpublished), being dedicated, by permission, to Sir George Grove. Gifted, in addition to his other accomplishments, with a genius for mechanical contrivances, Mr. Barnett's association with the Blind Institution led him to the invention, some few months before his death, of a type-writing machine enabling blind persons to write readily according to the Brail system. He was the musical critic at one time of the Sydney Morning Herald, and latterly was attached, in the same capacity, to the Sydney Daily Telegraph.

We are also apprised from Australia of the recent death, at Sydney, of Mr. W. H. PALING, head of the firm of W. H. Paling & Co., Limited, pianoforte and music importers. The deceased established the business at Sydney some forty years ago, in the course of which time it has grown to important dimensions, having branches in different parts of Australia and occupying a leading position in the colony. Mr. Paling, who of late years had retired from active participation in the management, was a distinguished philanthropist, having, amongst other charitable works, both founded and liberally endowed the Carrington Hospital, at Sydney, of which he was the vice-president, and his loss will be keenly felt by all classes of the community.

We learn from New York of the death, in the early part of October last, at Brooklyn, of Professor SIGISMUND LASAR, in his seventy-fourth year. He was born in Hamburg on August 15, 1822, and at the age of twelve had attained such proficiency in music as to be able to officiate as organist and precentor at the "Johanneum" Grammar School in that town, he being a pupil of Schwencke. In 1839 he went to America, where he occupied various organistships in different parts of the States, and finally obtained a professorship at the Packer Institute, in Brooklyn, with which he has been associated for the last twenty years. A much-esteemed and busy teacher, and organist successively at several New York churches, Professor Lasar found time to edit and in part compose a great number of selections of hymns and anthems, amongst them the "New York Hymnary," "English Anthems," "The Ancient Canticles," and "Part-Songs for the Packer Institute," at which latter Institution he taught many of the best English anthems. He was an enthusiastic admirer of Richard Wagner, and took a leading share in the foundation, under Theodore Thomas, of the first Wagner-Verein in New York.

Mr. JAMES GOUGH, senior partner in the well-known pianoforte and music-selling firm of Gough and Davy, in Hull, died somewhat suddenly, on October 30, at the Nurses' Home in that town. The deceased, who had been established in business for upwards of forty years, had taken an active interest in local musical matters, and was highly respected. He was in his seventy-first year.

M. ALPHONSE STENNEBRUGGEN, celebrated horn virtuoso, and for many years principal professor of his instrument at the Strassburg Conservatoire, died last month at that town, aged seventy-one. He was a native of Liège, where he was a pupil of the Conservatoire, and subsequently obtained the post of principal horn player at the Royal Theatre, Brussels. In 1853 he took up his residence in America, and two years later accepted the appointment referred to at Strassburg, from which place he paid frequent visits to Baden-Baden to take part in the, at one time, famous concert performances taking place there. M. Stennebruggen, while being an excellent instrumentalist, was also a highly-cultured musician. He had received decorations from the late Emperor Napoleon and from the King of the Belgians.

The death is announced, on October 15, at Vienna, of MARIE MESSERSCHMIDT-GRÜNNER, who in 1870 founded the first Ladies' Orchestra, which she conducted, and the enormous success of which, in all parts of Europe and America, has resulted in so many more or less satisfactory imitations of the original enterprise. The deceased lady, who was a thorough musician, equally proficient as a pianist and violinist, was the daughter of the once popular Viennese singer, Anton Grönnner, and was in her forty-ninth year.

JULIUS BRUNO ALBRECHT, for many years inspector and principal secretary at the Leipzig Conservatorium, died in that town on October 18, aged seventy. He had been principal clarinetist in the Opera and the Gewandhaus orchestras previous to his appointment at the Conservatorium, in which latter position he distinguished himself by his excellent business qualities, while his sterling character and personal amiability gained him many friends.

M. OBIN, a once celebrated bass singer at the Paris Opera, and a professor at the Conservatoire, died in the French capital on the 9th ult., aged seventy-six. He was born at Asq, near Lille, studied at the Paris Conservatoire, and made his début at the Opéra in 1844, as Brabantio in Rossini's "Otello." For a number of years Obin enjoyed great popularity, both at the institution referred to and at the Opéra Comique, his most successful parts being that of Leporello in "Don Giovanni" and of Moise in "Moses in Egypt." He succeeded Levasseur about twenty years ago in the professorship for operatic singing at the Conservatoire. Obin's remains were buried in the tomb he had caused to be erected for himself some years since, in the Egyptian style, in allusion to his favourite impersonation of Moise in Rossini's opera.

The death, at the mature age of ninety, of the Maestro GIUSEPPE CATAVITA, is announced on October 22, at Lugo. An intimate friend from early youth of Rossini, and an excellent musician, he many years since established himself at Lugo as a teacher of the art, in which capacity he has formed innumerable pupils, both instrumentalists and vocalists, some of whom, amongst them the tenor, Carlo Carpi, have attained celebrity. He was also an able composer, chiefly for the Church, his compositions including several cantatas, motets, and a Requiem Mass of considerable merit. He was a member of the Accademia Filarmonica of Bologna.

A sad event in the premature death of Mr. GRANT McNEILL has cast a gloom over musical circles in Edinburgh. Mr. McNeill, who had just completed his thirtieth year, had already won an honoured place among Edinburgh professionals, and his violoncello playing was widely and deservedly admired. He was a pupil of Mr. Carl Hamilton in Edinburgh, and of Professor Cossmann in Frankfurt.

M. GUSTAVE FLAXLAND, formerly chief of one of the most important music publishing firms in Paris, and an able musician, died in that capital on the 11th ult. He was born at Strassburg in 1825, and studied music under J. Leybach, and afterwards at the Paris Conservatoire, when he turned his attention to music publishing. Commencing in a very small way, Flaxland, by dint of ability and perseverance, succeeded in a comparatively short time in working up an extensive business. He was first in publishing in France the works of Robert Schumann, as also of the earlier operas of Richard Wagner, including "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin." With the last-named composer he was on terms of intimate friendship, and during the troubled period of the master's first sojourn in Paris, when he endeavoured to support himself by doing hack work for the trade, Flaxland on several occasions came to his aid. Some twenty years since the deceased retired from publishing affairs, being succeeded by MM. Durand et fils, and devoted himself to the manufacture of pianofortes.

The death is announced, on the 12th ult., at Asnières, of M. EDMOND HOCMELE, in his seventy-second year. Although blind from infancy, M. Hocmelle, who was a native of Paris, studied successfully at the Conservatoire, where he obtained a first prize for organ playing, and was appointed organist of the Church of Saint Philippe du Roule, a position which he worthily occupied for a great number of years. He was the composer of some operettas which have been performed in the concert-room, and under the pseudonym of Edmond de Bissy contributed critical essays to the press.

A veteran artist, CHRISTIAN AUGUST ELSIG, who but a few days previously celebrated his jubilee as a member of the Gewandhaus orchestra, receiving a gratifying decoration from the King of Saxony on the occasion, died at Leipzig on the 6th ult. The deceased, who was an excellent violoncellist, and a much-sought teacher of his instrument, was in his seventy-second year, having entered the Gewandhaus orchestra when he was twenty-one.

From Warsaw we learn of the death, on the 1st ult., of M. ALEXANDER ZARZYCKI, the whilom director of the Warsaw Conservatoire, at the age of sixty-one. A Pole by birth, he was a pianist of wide reputation, and also made his mark as a composer with some charming songs and pieces for violin and pianoforte. He was the conductor of a choral society and of the Cathedral choir.

On October 4, at San Francisco, J. H. ROSEWALD, esteemed violinist, aged fifty-four.

On October 17, at Vienna, J. RIEGEN, under the pseudonym of NIGRI, dramatic author and successful librettist.

On October 25, at Währing, near Vienna, FRANZ ERL, operatic singer, formerly of the Imperial opera, brother of the more famous Viennese tenor, Joseph Erl, aged seventy-seven.

On October 27, at Wells, Somerset, CHARLES WILLIAMS LAVINGTON, for fifty-three years assistant-organist and organist of Wells Cathedral, in his seventy-seventh year.

Recently, at Schloss Erlan, near Vienna, DUKE ELMAR OF OLDENBURG, younger brother of the reigning duke, distinguished poet and musician, aged fifty-two.

On October 30, at Warsaw, JAN KLECZINSKY, pianist and composer, and editor of the music journal Echo Muzyczne.

Recently, at Paris, JOSEPH GOUT, for many years leader of the second violins at the Opéra, pupil of Girard at the Conservatoire, aged sixty-four.

On the 2nd ult., at Edinburgh, GRANT TURNER McNEILL, violoncellist, in his thirtieth year.

On the 3rd ult., at Frankfort-on-Main, JOSÉ LEDERER, for many years principal tenor at the Darmstadt Opera and the Frankfort Stadt-Theater, by suicide, aged fifty-two.

On the 4th ult., at Vienna, FRAU CAROLINE UHLMANN, widow of the founder of the firm of Leopold Uhlmann, Imperial manufacturers of wind instruments, in the management of whose business she took an active share, aged eighty-two.

On the 5th ult., at Castelnau-d'Aud, PROSPER DE BATAILLE, operatic singer, formerly of the Paris Opéra, aged sixty-six.

Recently, at Bayonne (New York), JOHN VINCENT HOGAN, popular operatic singer and teacher, aged fifty-five.

By the Queen's command, the Imperial Institute Orchestra played at Windsor Castle, on Saturday night, the 23rd ult. The programme, specially selected for the occasion by Her Majesty, included the melody from the "Chants du Voyageur," by Paderewski, and the waltz, "Du und Du," by Johann Strauss.

MR. DAVID WILSON, the popular Scotch tenor, who is the fortunate possessor of a delightfully pure and sympathetic voice, gave a very successful Concert, under distinguished patronage, at the Steinway Hall, on the 20th ult. The programme was exceedingly well chosen. Mr. Wilson was assisted by several capable artists, of whom Messrs. Arthur Strugnell, Gabriel Thorp, Miss Emily McFarlane, and Madame Lena Law deserve special praise. A bright and amusing recitation by Miss Mary Sharp, "George Washington and his little hatchet," was encored.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Everyone who knows the value in educational matters of clearness of thought and accuracy of verbal expression will sympathize with Mr. Corder's protest in your October issue against the mischievous twaddle printed in one of your contemporaries on the subject of "Inspiration" in music. The propagation of such views is a direct encouragement to idleness among students and should therefore be hindered as much as possible. The ignorance which still prevails on the subject of "How the mind works" is positively amazing. The science of Psychology is now fairly well understood, and text-books on the subject are numerous, and within easy reach of quite moderately-filled purses. Yet people go on writing and speaking as though the operations of the human mind were entirely outside the domain of Natural Law—entirely uninfluenced by the sequence of cause and effect which meets the student in every other department of human enquiry. And of course superficial minds cannot see the essential difference between scientific and poetic description. It is the poet's highest mission to describe impressions—it is the scientist's duty to explain their causes.

The working of a highly-trained, or highly-gifted brain is often so swift, so unerring, and so effortless, that its possessor becomes conscious only of the result achieved, which then seems to have suddenly been "given" to him without any effort on his part. The poet is fully justified in conveying this impression by a picturesque simile or metaphor. Not so the man of science—the teacher. His imperative duty is to trace the steps by which the brain (however unconsciously) has attained its result, and thereby to indicate the best methods of training to be pursued. To bring forward a verse of poetry as scientific evidence is to reveal oneself hopelessly unfit for scientific investigation. That an educational journal should speak of a gifted composer as writing down his music from the dictation of a "Presence" is, as Mr. Corder rightly says, "disheartening." But even more disheartening is it to find exactly the same grotesque blunder in a large and important musical book just published—i.e., Mr. Henry Davey's "History of English Music." You, sir, have already demolished Mr. Davey's absurd statements anent the "invention" (sic) of Polyphony by Dunstable, but the passage I wish to call attention to is still more mirth-provoking. Speaking of the composition of "Sumer is icumen in," which he accepts unreservedly (though there is absolutely no proof) as the composition of John of Fornsete, Mr. Davey says: "At a miraculous command, we are told, Caedmon began the strain of English poetry. But he did not begin a new art. John of Fornsete did more than Caedmon, he for a moment created an absolutely new art (sic!). . . . Supernatural assistance was more called for in the uniting of harmony, rhythm, and melody, which John of Fornsete had achieved,* than in transferring the existing art of poetry to another language . . . and rather than to the watcher in the stable at Whitby, it was to the monk in the Scriptorium above the Thames that One came not by night, but by a spring morning (how does Mr. Davey know this?), and the Presence said to him, 'Compose.' John of Fornsete knew not . . . how mighty an art he had called into being (!) . . . But he obeyed the command to compose, and wrote down the 'Sumer is icumen in,' which we all love" (!!).

If Mr. Corder knows of a more "disheartening" passage than the above in any modern musical work he will greatly oblige by naming it to—Yours truly,

COMMON SENSE.

* To test Mr. Davey's accuracy, it is only necessary to peruse the musical examples of the same epoch published in your September number, p. 585—to say nothing of the earlier ones given in your issue for August.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

*. Notices of Concerts, of which programmes must invariably be sent and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

BERNOULLI-BARLOW.—It is almost impossible to form an opinion without consulting a very eminent teacher of singing—or, better still, a reliable medical authority.

J. K.—1. If a test organ piece be given to the candidates, it should be announced some time beforehand and be prepared by them for the competition, or each candidate might be asked to play a piece of legitimate organ music of his own selection. If the competitors should not be very proficient, they should be asked to play a Psalm Tune and, perhaps, a chorus like "And the glory of the Lord," as if accompanying a choir, the pieces selected not being previously announced. 2. As test organ pieces to be prepared by candidates, we might suggest the Andante in E minor (H. Smart) or the Andante in D (E. Silas).

F. KENT.—Much valuable information on Pipe Organs is to be found in the first portion of Stainer's "Organ Primer" (Novello), and will probably meet your requirements; "Organs and Organ Tuning," by Elliston, is a useful book on the subject and moderate in price. A small hydraulic engine would be much more suitable than an electric motor, and more easily controlled.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

ASCOT.—The Sunningdale Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Handel's "Messiah," under the direction of Mr. E. Stephenson, at the Grand Stand, on the 14th ult. The choral singing was very creditable, and the solos were effectively rendered by Miss Maggie Purvis, the Countess Valda Gleichen, Mr. William Green, and Mr. H. Scott. The orchestra, which consisted almost entirely of local "strings" assisted by professional "wind," was ably led by Mr. H. A. Tyler, and Mr. Sims played the obbligato in "The trumpet shall sound" with admirable effect.

BATH.—A highly successful Concert was given by Miss Charlotte Davies (pupil of Madame Schumann) on the 2nd ult., when she was assisted by Miss Cicely Trarr (vocalist), Miss Zoë Pyne (violinist), and Mrs. H. G. Terry (violin-cellist). The programme included Purcell's "Golden" Sonata.—On the 18th ult., Mr. W. S. Hoyte gave two much appreciated Recitals on the new organ recently erected in the Abbey Church by Messrs. Norman Bros. and Beard. The programme, which was admirably annotated, contained many masterpieces written for the organ, and their performances advantageously displayed the resources of the instrument.

BIRKENHEAD.—An interesting and novel programme was provided by the Winter Entertainments Society, at the Cloughton Music Hall, on the 15th ult., a specialty being the introduction of recitations and dialogues by Mr. Charles Fry and Miss Olive Kennett. Songs were contributed by Mrs. Helen Trust and Mr. Douglas Powell, the programme being further varied by the flute solos of Mr. Lemonné and the violoncello solos of Miss Eveline Barry. The accompanist was Mr. J. C. Clarke.

BLUNDELLSANDS.—The pretty little Concert Hall at this Seaside resort was crowded on the 16th ult., when the directors of the Winter Entertainments gave their third Concert of this season, and provided a programme which included, as a special novelty, two of the musical recitations of Mr. Stanley Hawley and some dialogues. These were given by the well-known elocutionist, Mr. Charles Fry, and his gifted colleague, Miss Olive Kennett. Mrs. Helen Trust and Mr. Douglas Powell were the vocalists, and instrumental solos were contributed by Miss Eveline Barry (violin-cello) and Mr. Lemonné, the Australian flautist. Mr. J. C. Clarke accompanied.

BOLTON.—The Amateur Orchestral Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. Andrew Morris, resumed its pleasant evenings at the Albert Hall on the 13th ult., when a meritorious rendering was given of Mendelssohn's music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The singing of Miss E. Hiller and the violoncello playing by Mr. Jean Géardé elicited much and well-merited applause. Some pianoforte pieces contributed by Miss J. Crompton were also much appreciated.

BRADFORD.—An attractive musical Service was given on the 6th ult., in St. Chrysostom's Church, under the conductorship of Mr. Fawcett, with Mr. E. Whittaker presiding at the organ. The music included Goss's anthem "O taste and see," which was effectively sung by the choir; the march from Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," and hymns and Psalms, which were orchestrated by Mr. H. J. Mason.

CHRISTCHURCH (HANTS).—A series of Organ Recitals was commenced in All Saints' Church on the 13th ult., when an excellent programme was rendered by Mr. E. L. Precey, organist of the Priory. Mr. E. C. Jarvis sang two solos, which were accompanied by Mr. H. E. Robinson, organist of All Saints'. These Recitals merit the support of all music lovers in the neighbourhood.

CLIFTON.—Master Frank Merrick, aged nine years, the son of a well-known local professional musician, and Miss Galsworthy gave a Pianoforte and Harp Recital at the Victoria Rooms, on the 16th ult. Master Merrick's touch is neat and crisp, and a high degree of intelligence marked his interpretation of the compositions he performed. The lady skilfully played two harp solos and a duet with Master Merrick. The young artists were heartily applauded and recalled.

CLITHEROE, DOWNHAM.—On the 12th ult. a Concert, at which a chorus and orchestra of about fifty assisted, took place under the direction of Signor Risegari at the Public Hall. The programme included Beethoven's "Choral Fantasia," a selection from Cherubini's opera "Medea," and Mendelssohn's "First Walpurgis Night." The principal vocalists were Mrs. A. Musson, Miss S. F. Musson, Mrs. T. Garnett, Mr. G. Butterworth, Mr. Woods, and Mr. E. Gudgeon, and Miss Clarke presided at the pianoforte.

HASLINGDEN.—Mr. David Hanson gave a miscellaneous Concert, on the 30th ult., in the Public Hall. Mr. Hanson's singing was much admired, and he was ably assisted by Miss Clara Broadbent, Mr. A. S. Kinnell, Mr. J. W. Gaggis (violinist), Mr. T. B. Marsden (flautist), and Mr. R. H. Haworth (accompanist).

HUDDERSFIELD.—It was gratifying to see so large an audience in the Town Hall on the 2nd ult., when the Philharmonic Society gave the first Concert of the season. The orchestral performances included an Overture by Suppé, the Andante from Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, and Svendsen's Romance (Op. 26) for violin and orchestra, the solo part of the last-named being effectively rendered by Mr. H. C. Henderson. Features of the Concert were the pianoforte playing of Misses Grist and Harrop, and the singing of Mrs. T. J. Dyson. Mr. J. E. Ibeson conducted.

KINGSLAND (HEREFORDSHIRE).—A most praiseworthy Concert was given on the 8th ult., at Lucton School, the programme being of a higher class than that usual on such occasions. The principal executants were Miss Lilian Redfern, vocalist; Mrs. Ireland and Mr. Cecil Harrington, violinists; Mr. L. Reese, violoncellist; Mr. F. R. Harris, pianoforte; Mr. E. Lawes and Mr. G. W. Redfern were the accompanists, and a good selection of part-songs and choruses was effectively sung by the school choir, under the skilful direction of Mr. F. R. Harris, to whom the success of the evening was largely owing.

KINGSTON-ON-THAMES.—The third of the series of Organ Recitals now being given by Mr. A. P. Alderson in the Parish Church, took place on the 20th ult. The programme was made up entirely from the works of J. S. Bach, and comprised the Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Concerto, No. 1, in G, Variations on a Choral, Toccata and Fugue in F, and two short Adagios. This somewhat novel scheme proved a great success. Mr. Alderson was heard, perhaps, to the greatest advantage in the Fantasia and Fugue and in the Toccata in F. He was assisted by Miss M. V. E. Perrott, who sang with much feeling and delicacy two solos, "My heart ever faithful" and "Thou goest now, my Saviour, forth."

LEAMINGTON SPA.—In connection with the Services of the Dedication Festival at the Parish Church (All Saints'), Mr. W. H. Bellamy, the organist and choirmaster, gave an Organ Recital, on the 2nd ult., to a crowded congregation. The programme consisted of pieces by Bach, Mendelssohn, Henselt, and Lemmens. The Hon. Mrs. Robert Lyttelton (daughter of Mr. Santley) was the vocalist. On the 6th ult. the annual Choral Festival of the united choirs of Leamington and Warwick was held, under the direction of Mr. Bellamy. Upwards of 250 voices, accompanied by trumpets and organ, took part in the service. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Myles Foster in A, the anthem was Garrett's "In humble faith," and the Te Deum was sung to Woodward in E flat.

MANCHESTER.—Mr. Speelman's second Saturday Popular Concert, on the 9th ult., at the Free Trade Hall, proved quite as successful as the first. The singing of Miss Ella Russell and Mr. Lempiere Pringle was fully appreciated by a large audience, as were also the violin and violoncello solos respectively played by Miss Edith Robinson and Mr. Carl Fuchs. The programme also included Wagner's Overture to "Rienzi" and other orchestral pieces, and Mr. C. H. Fogg rendered able assistance as an accompanist.

NEWARK.—The works selected by the Philharmonic Society for the forthcoming season include Handel's "Acis and Galatea," Villiers Stanford's fine choral ballad "The Revenge," and Schubert's cantata "The Song of Miriam."

PORTSMOUTH.—The Temperance Choral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. W. E. Green, gave a successful Concert on the 6th ult., in Lake Road Chapel. The programme contained Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," the solo part of which was effectively sung by Madame San Carlo; Cowen's "Bridal Chorus," Stewart's "Bells of St. Michael's Tower," and Pinsuti's "Good-night, beloved." Tenor songs contributed by Mr. Frederick Williams were also much appreciated, and able assistance was rendered at the organ by Mr. J. Parkinson.

SOUTHPORT.—The third of the series of Winter Entertainments took place at the Cambridge Hall on the 14th ult. The vocalists were Mrs. Helen Trust and Mr. Douglas Powell. Mr. Lemonné gave some flute solos, and recitations and duologues were supplied by Mr. Charles Fry and Miss Olive Kennett, their musical recitations being a special feature, the accompanist being Mr. J. C. Clarke.

SOUTHWELL.—The seventeenth annual Concert of the lay clerks of the Cathedral took place on October 24, in the Concert Hall. The performance was of a miscellaneous character, and included Auber's Overture to "Masaniello," German's "Henry VIII." dances, and other orchestral pieces, which were effectively rendered under the conductorship of Mr. Liddle. The vocalists were Miss V. Beaumont, and Messrs. Price, Longmore, Lightowler, and J. Key; and a pianoforte solo was contributed by Miss Calvert.

SUTTON.—J. F. Barnett's cantata "The Ancient Mariner" was performed on the 6th ult., by the Sutton Conservatoire Choral and Orchestral Society. The performance, which was very satisfactory, was conducted by the composer. Miss Bertha Acworth, Mrs. Alice Dunn, Mr. Henry Beauchamp, and Mr. J. T. Hutchinson were the solo vocalists.

TETBURY.—Miss Alice White gave an attractive Concert, on the 13th ult., at the Assembly Rooms, in aid of the funds of the Cottage Hospital. The vocalists were Miss A. Howard, Miss A. Thompson, Mr. L. Addison, and Mr. F. A. Chambers, by whom an excellent selection of songs were sung. The Concert-giver's pianoforte solos by Chopin, Schumann, Liszt, and Smetana were worthily appreciated, as also was the violin playing by Miss E. Marsh. Miss A. Howard also appeared with success as reciter in the version of "The Story of a faithful Soul," with Mr. Stanley Hawley's clever musical accompaniment.

WELLINGTON, NEW ZEALAND.—Mr. Tallis Trimnell is continuing his high-class Organ Recitals at St. Peter's Church to increasing congregations. On September 26 he played a representative selection from German and Italian composers, and was ably assisted by the choir and Madame Evelyn Carlton, who contributed two vocal solos.

WINDSOR.—The Shinner Quartet gave two much appreciated Chamber Concerts on the 9th and 16th ult., at the Albert Institute. The most important works in the high-class programmes were Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18, No. 1), Smetana's Quartet in E minor ("Aus meinem Leben"), Brahms's Quintet in F minor (Op. 34)—in which the pianoforte part was played by Miss Fanny Davies—and Mozart's Quintet for strings in G minor.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. W. M. Wait, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Margaret Pattens, Rood Lane, E.C.—Mr. F. Fertil, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Bromley, Kent.—Miss Mary Layton, Organist to Westbourne Park Chapel, Paddington.—Mr. Frank Stapley, Organist and Choirmaster to Woolwich Dockyard Church.—Mr. J. THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW.

The November Number ran out of print within seven days of its publication, necessitating a reprint.

GRADUATED EXERCISES FOR ELEMENTARY CLASSES IN BOTH NOTATIONS.

In the October issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW a series of graduated exercises in both notations was commenced. These exercises will be adapted for use in school and other classes beginning an Autumn course. They will provide not only easy sight singing studies to be done in the class room, but exercises suitable for home study. With blackboard work and an educational method of teaching songs, they will probably suffice for the needs of many school classes, or they will usefully supplement a regular class book.

LESSONS ON INTERVALS AND THEIR NOMENCLATURE.

The identification and nomenclature of intervals is one of the difficulties of elementary musical theory.

With a view to assist Teachers and Students, a set of plain lessons upon this topic was commenced in the October issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW.

The system of naming recommended by the Education Department, the Royal Academy of Music, Trinity College, &c., will be used.

Copies of the October and November numbers may be obtained of the Publishers.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S CANTATAS.

* UNA

FOURTH AND FIFTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
OCTOBER 4, 1893."Una" is quite one of his best."—Musical Standard.

"The result, in the present case, leaves no doubt that into all the places which know his previous compositions 'Una' will find a way and become as much a favourite as its forerunners. . . . Mr. Gaul considers before all things the elegance and symmetry of his melodic phrases."—Musical Times.

"We believe that Mr. Gaul has attained greater popularity with small English provincial choral societies than any other composer, living or dead."—London Daily Graphic.

CANTATA FOR ADVENT.

† THE TEN VIRGINS

Third Edition. Seventh and Eighth Thousand.

This Edition contains the additional Soprano air "Sun of my Soul."

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard. Infinitely superior to any previous effort of the composer."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"A distinct advance upon any of its predecessors."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

PRODUCED WITH THE UTMOST SUCCESS BY THE
BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

* JOAN OF ARC

Staff Edition. Sixteenth to Twentieth Thousand.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."—Shields Daily News.

FIFTH AND SIXTH THOUSAND.

PRODUCED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, JULY 9, 1892

† ISRAEL IN THE

"The work was given under Mr. Gaul's own direction by some 3,000 singers, accompanied by the Palace orchestra. Mr. Gaul has presented in no previous work better characteristics or more successful efforts than to be found in 'Israel in the Wilderness.' The popular composer was enthusiastically cheered at the close of the performance."—Musical News.

The above Cantatas have been specially planned to meet the requirements of Musical Societies, the greater portion being choral.

From THE REV. WILLIAM LEFROY, D.D., Dean of Norwich.

November 5, 1895.

"I cheerfully testify to the rare qualities of the Phonorium. It was erected in the Agricultural Hall to accompany the hymns sung at the Church Congress Meetings. It possesses considerable power, unusual sweetness, and exquisite softness. For the purpose of choral communions, worship in small churches or large residences, it would be difficult to find a more suitable instrument.

"WILLIAM LEFROY, D.D., Dean of Norwich."

From THE REV. H. R. NEVILL, Archdeacon of Norfolk, Hon. Sec. of Norwich Church Congress, 1895.

"The Phonorium supplied for use at the recent Church Congress Meetings in the Agricultural Hall gave great satisfaction. It was used in a room capable of seating nearly 3,000 persons, and although a large majority present were singing it was distinctly audible at the far end of the room.

"The Phonorium has evidently considerable carrying power without impairing the purity of tone, and for an instrument occupying so small a space the effects produced are remarkable.

"Yours faithfully,

"H. R. NEVILL, Archdeacon of Norfolk,

"Hon. Sec. of Norwich Church Congress, 1895."

"UP TO DATE" is a new departure in the class of work to which it belongs. It is written with the idea of providing, for performance by children, a Cantata of dramatic character and of humorous nature, composed in such a manner as to be interesting both to adults and to young people. It is adapted to the requirements of either stage or concert platform, and it is trusted that both music and words will be recognised as improvements upon the usual model. There is no fee for performance.

THE GENUINE SCHIEDMAYER PIANOFORTES

TESTIMONIAL FROM MR. EDWARD LLOYD:—

London, August 17th, 1892.

Dear Mr. Ramsden,—The two Schiedmayer Pianofortes which I bought from you—a Grand and an Upright—manufactured by the "Schiedmayer Pianoforte fabrik, Stuttgart," are simply charming, and both give me the greatest satisfaction.

Beautifully sympathetic in tone, a touch that is most agreeable, and for evenness and repetition all that can be desired.

*I may add that my musical friends who are Pianists and who have played upon
